AS STREAMS FLOW SO FLOW OUR LIVES

As the Large Streams are Formed by the Mingling of the Small, Pure Streamlets, so Our Social Life is Formed by the Growth from Childhood's Purity to Manhood and Womanhood.

As I walked along the mountain side I found a small spring of water from which a tiny rivulet flowed. And as I viewed it I mused upon its meaning. The water was clear and pure. As I followed its course it seemed to laugh and play as on its way it leaped and splashed over numerous stones and miniature waterfalls. Here it flowed swiftly and there it lingered in an eddy, seemingly stopping to rest or view some object that held its entranced gaze. Soon another stream joins its water with the first and now through larger grown it seems to play and toy the more. Again, not far along another stream mingles its waters with those I follow. The smile that once played over the countenance of our little friend has changed to a more solemn mien and serious air. And as its volume has increased its purity has decreased. In its clamorous course for the wide limitless plain it has torn its banks and its waters are murky with its association of elements other than its own. Yet onward it flows soon to join its waters with the mighty river. Now it becomes more tranquil in its course and seemingly more pure in appearance as calmly it sweeps on into the majestic sea.

To my mind their came a thought, How like the life of man. In childhood's happy hour without a care to mar our pleasures and play with ceaseless joy. Now we have grown to manhood's estate and other associates have joined with us on our journey. The laugh of childhood has changed to the more serious air of the business world. The rush and swirl of men and business has dropped from its banks into our lives, an element that, perhaps has hid our purity from the gaze of men. Yet onward we go and like the river grow serene and tranquil in our flow. The impurities sink far below the surface and ere long are buried in the slime of the past. Our years increased as has our experience until now we are composed and sedate. Like the river we sweep along in graceful flow and soon our journey ends in the majestic, boundless sea of Eternity, and there, equal with our fellowmen we mingle on a common level in the endless, limitless ocean of eternity.

We're picturesque, but they lacked the convenience of modern dwellings. A family in very moderate circumstances can get really a better home today than that of the wealthy a century ago.
