Mr. Gilpin, of the Queen City House, Gives Some Timely Advice to Flower Growers.

The question "What flowers will grow in the shade?", is put to me every spring by many of our city people, whose little patches which they wish to devote to flowers is so walled up by neighboring houses, that the direct rays of the sun never touch it. But few plants develop their flowers there, and none will do so well as if it were up by sun shine part of the day. Fuchsias, Pansies, Forget-me-nots, Violets, Lobelias, Lily of the valley, Hollyhocks, Phloxes, and other herbaceous plants whose native habit is a shady wood, will do best. But even these languish if denied all direct sunlight. The best effect in such situations is produced by ornamental leaved plants, the beauty of which is not dependent upon their flowers. Among these may be ranked the gold and silver variegated leaved Geraniums, Begonias, Caladiums, Coleuses, etc., which if planted so as to bring the various shades on contrast, produce a pleasing effect, which continues during the entire summer months, and is not surpassed by any display of flowers. The cultivators of flowers in rooms should understand the necessity of sunlight to plants that are to flower, and endeavor to get those as close as possible to a window having an eastern or southern aspect. The higher the temperature the more plants suffer from want of light. Many plants would remain semi-ferment, in a temperature of forty degrees, in a cellar for example, away from direct sunlight for months without material injury, while if the cellar contained a furnace, keeping a temperature of 70 degrees, they would all die. Such could particularly be the case with plants of a half hardy nature, such as monthly roses, carnations, fuchsias, geraniums, etc. In our greenhouse culture of flowers, direct sunlight is in all important consideration, and a spell of sunless weather in mid-winter is often a loss to us of many dollars by preventing the development of flowers. Hence, we use every means at command to dispose of plants to secure the greatest amount of light. The debilitating effects of want of direct sunlight on plants is well illustrated by taking a vigorous plant in full foliage and flower that has been growing in the direct light of our greenhouse benches, and placing it under the bench. If the temperature is high, say seventy degrees, in forty eight hours, the sickly signs, showing want of light, will be apparent to an experienced eye, in a week its condition would be such as to indicate sickness to the most common observer, and in a month it would most likely be dead. In this respect there is some analogy between plant and animal life, and it teaches us the importance of light for our own healthy development. Certain it is that greenhouse and garden operatives will compare favorably with any other class of workmen so far as health is concerned, and I doubt if it would be easy to find the same number of workmen employed out of the sunlight, who could show such health as these sun browned boys of ours.
