The commencement exercises of the Western Conservatory of Music will be held some time in June. Professor Falt who is in charge of the Conservatory work here is not just sure of the exact date, but thinks it will be early in the month.

Reports from Baker county are to the effect that Sam White is not healing up the sore places made during the primaries and that he cannot include Baker county in his list of majorities. It is absolutely certain that he cannot carry either this county or Wallowa.

It was reported yesterday afternoon that the two young daughters of Mr. David Eccles were assaulted by an old man, a tramp, who was frightened away by other school children. Further particulars could not be learned last night and the police had not yet secured the man.—Democrat.

We are mailing over 1000 sample copies of the daily Observer to those who reside along the rural deliveries and at post offices who receive daily mail. Don't be afraid to take them out of the office as there will be no expense whatever until a solicitor calls upon you and your subscription is obtained.

Sam Gross yesterday purchased the delivery business formerly owned by Mat Matson and has formed a partnership with Adney Rogers. The firm name will hereafter be Rogers and Gross. The boys are both rustlers and there will surely be something doing in the transfer and delivery business in their neighborhood.

The flag staff which for many years has withstood the fury of the elements in the old city hall yard now stands erect again. For many seasons it has been standing at an angle which gave the impression that it was about to fall. Yesterday the city had it taken down and about ten feet of the lower end sawed off and the remaining portion reset. It looks more in accord with the rest of the world now.

Special Notice.

For the next few weeks there will be several hundred sample copies of daily Observer mailed regularly to residents of the rural deliveries in the county. We want you to read them carefully. We do not expect you to pay for them. Our reason is so doing is in the hopes that after you have been visited for an indefinite period, when our solicitor calls upon you will want to be added to our permanent list of subscribers.

ASTHMA IS CURABLE USUALLY

means of drug, and now only prescribes such remedies as will afford temporary relief. Osteopathy has demonstrated that asthma is curable and that the drugless system can, if given sufficient time, permanently relieve the great majority of cases. The reason that Osteopathy has had such great success is because it has been able to locate and correct the real cause of trouble, which proves to be anatomical changes in the body sufficient to irritate nerve centers and thus cause contraction of bronchial muscles.

Asthma is a spasmodic contraction of the muscles of the bronchial tubes interfering with the free passage of air. Various irritants will produce in different individuals paroxysms, such as colds, extreme heat, improper food, dust, irritating odors and even certain climates. But what is ever irritating to one person will have no effect upon another which shows that these immediate causes only irritate some predisposing cause, lying at the seat of the disease. A moment's consideration of the anatomy of the parts will aid in explaining why osteopathy has located the source of this trouble.

The air on entering the lungs passes through the trachea or windpipe into the bronchi which divide into smaller bronchial tubes composed of cartilage lined with mucous membrane. This cartilage is surrounded by a thin muscular coat which, when irritated, contracts diminishing the bronchial caliber. These muscles are controlled by various nerves and nerve centers. Including the pneumogastric which passes down from the base of the skull in front of the cervical vertebrae and centers the chest to give off fibers to the bronchial tubes; the inferior cervical ganglion, located along the front of the lower vertebrae of the neck; and lastly, the ganglia in the upper part of the chest lying along the spine. These together with the nerve centers situated in the spinal cord in the same region, complete this pulmonary nerve supply. These nerves also contain vaso-motor fibers which control blood supply so that any irritation to them will produce congestion of the mucous membrane in the bronchial tubes.

If by some injury as a fall or strain, perhaps aided by inherited weakness, some ribs or upper vertebrae become disturbed in their articulations, they will either by direct pressure or by obstruction of the blood flow to these ganglia and nerve centers, cause congestion and irritation of the nerves controlling the muscles of these bronchial tubes.

Asthma, like every other trouble always has two causes an exciting cause and a primary or predisposing cause. Osteopathy has learned that the primary cause as a partial and slight dislocation of the vertebrae or ribs, which serves to irritate the nerves controlling muscles. Under favorable circumstances, nature is able to overcome this irritation. But let the special irritant of the asthmatic patient set up, whether that be dust, cold or what not, and the resultant irritation to the ends of these nerves in the bronchial tubes must cause contraction of the muscles and so occasion an attack of asthma.

Medical treatment has been directed mainly toward relieving the seeming cause, as ordering a change of climate or treating the cold, and also toward quieting the nerves by drugs supposed to have a sedative effect upon the centers involved. The success of this plan stands self-confessed. Obviously it does not reach the underlying cause. Osteopathic treatment is entirely different.

Of course Osteopathy does not cure all cases. Some existed so long, have become too settled to be entirely corrected. But the great majority can be cured. Of the remainder most will experience a greater or less degree of relief, while none are injured by osteopathic treatment. In truth, had Osteopathy done nothing else, its success in treating asthma would alone make it deserving of an honored place in the healing art.—Osteopathic Health
