The Hill
We who live upon the hill
Have a joyous happy life
Rising early in the morning
Working till the car
Shall tell you one day
In a rambling bit of rhyme:
Early morning; tinkle, tinkle,
Cows come home, with udders full,
Horses in their stalls are neighing,
Stamp their feet, their halters pull
Milk and feed and harness horses
All to breakfast, then the rule.
Busy house wife, baking, sweeping,
Working in the garden, too
Has her day dreams bright and fancy
Wishing that they could come true,
So her lot would not be always
One in which, t, b, k, and brew,
Thrifty farm r, most a, hoing,
Weed that not have grown last night
Well we know that he would never,
Leave his field in such a plight;
For t, plow, and uov, and harrow
Are to him a great delight.
Hills are now, lovely, lovely,
With the roses, wild, and red,
While the cherry shakes its blossoms,
From the branch above your head
And the stream from mountain sources
Ripples o'er its pebbly bed,
See the valley as a picture,
He's below you, clothed in green
With Mt. Early in the distance,
And La Grande below is seen,
Factory and dwelling, outskirt,
Business blocks lie in between.
What is this to t, b, k, from r?
And his busy wife a well?
Birds, and blossoms, tiny insects,
Have each one their tale to tell,
From the whirl of mountain squirrel
To the coyote's college yell,
Ah! the dew is falling,
Now the time for evening rest,
Music, books, and the Observer,
Giving to the day a zest,
And we wonder what is better
Than this life in the far west.
