THE TRADING WORLD.

When the commercial world is named sixty-one nationalities any meant, that are scattered over the earth covering 41,414,336 square miles of its surface with an average of 1,508,659,000 people, speaking hundreds of languages, professing many religions, covered with skins of many hues from white to black. Each nation has its own form of Government and distinct culture. Various as are the habits of the peoples on earth and strong as are their local prejudices against all others, the experience of all has taught each tribe of people that it can best provide for its daily wants by exchanging things with others. This exchange of commodities is called commerce. The aggregate of the world's trade, measured by our dollar is enormous, for every nation and people on earth trades with the other nations and people in a greater or less degree. Statisticians tell us that the aggregate exports from several of the people and nations amounts to $10,655,415,000 annually and the imports are $11,970,594,000 making the world foreign commerce put up $22,626,009,000 worth of things.

During the same period that the whole world was trading across boundary lines to the extent of $22,626,009,000 worth the United States sent across its borders of sale in distant countries stuff to the value of $1,856,965,925 and during the same time the United States imported things to the value of $1,008,224,820 making the foreign trade aggregate $2,865,190,747. These figures make

IT IS CHILDREN.

It is the children who die. Years ago in the cathedral at Lima, Peru, during a procession, a little girl, careless possibly for a moment, allowed the candle she was carrying to fall on the veil of a companion, and sixteen hundred children were burned to death.

A flash on the stage of the Iroquois theater and more than five hundred children were burned to death.

A flame in the hold of the General Slocum, and nearly one thousand children were burned to death or drowned.

In each of these great shocking disasters there were adults who lost their lives, but they were few in number, comparatively, and of the number of adults present the greater number had escaped—for it is the children who die when a panic comes.

The fact ought to bring more closely to the management of excursion boats and railway trains and to managers of theaters, to the clergy and, above all, to the officials charged with inspection of buildings and of vessels, the great responsibility attaching to them, for in time of panic, it is the children who die by the hundred and die in agony.

Decorate.

The citizens of this city should decorate their homes for the fourth. The cost will be but little and the result will greatly enhance the magnitude of the celebration. A few flags and a little bunting will give the whole town the air of a celebration.

Canada is ahead in one statistical item. In 34 years its divorces numbered 69, while those in the United States for the same period footed up 700,000.

Mr. Roosevelt learned at Philadelphia four years ago that there is no use in trying to resist a republican convention, so he made no fight this time.

It is to be hoped that there was nothing significant in opening the Chicago convention with a frost.

The Democratic party can not be expected to stand pat, since it refuses even to stand hitched.
