THE EVIL OF CLOGGING

About Chronic Constipation and Some of its Dangers—Why Cathartics Fail and Drugless Method Succeeds.

Perhaps no other unnatural condition exists in as many patients as does the condition of constipation. So common is it that many men and women have come to regard it simply as a peculiarity of their constitutions that is to be regretted; that must be met with an attack of cathartics occasionally when it reaches an acute stage; but that is bound to recur and cannot be finally cured. Certainly most sufferers have some ground for just such a view. Inasmuch as no pill or prescription has ever succeeded in restoring natural conditions for them

OTHER TROUBLES FOLLOW

The disease is almost fashionable, yet it discomforts are many and its dangers great. It implies, moreover, a condition of uncleanness, and an accumulation of waste matter in the intestine makes a fruitful breeding place for disease. Nor is there any doubt that the poisons emanating from this clogged sewer of the body are capable of carrying trouble to other organs. So that the possibilities of evil resulting from the condition of constipation are many and difficult indeed to measure.

THE FUTILITY OF PURGATIVES

It is useless to discuss at length why laxatives and purgatives fail utterly to give permanent relief. Every person who has depended upon their regular use will admit that they only cause the most temporary benefit. One is used until its efficacy grows less, the system becoming accustomed to it. Then another is tried with a like final outcome. And in extreme instances drugs fail entirely to produce any movement.

THE NATURAL STATE

In their natural state, with no interruption in their supply of blood or nerve force, the bowels are able to take care of themselves, to keep themselves clean and to perform their natural function of helping to rid the body of what it has no use for. In this work they have neighboring organs as assistants and the same rule of health applies to these assistants. If their normal function is not interrupted or their nerve force interfered with they will do their part of the work and do it well.

It is scarcely reasonable to suppose either that human beings were intended primarily to be constipated or that it was planned for them to be constantly absorbing physic. Of course little temporary irregularities may come from improper food, indiscretion in eating, or other causes, but such troubles are minor matters and not now under discussion.

THE SIMPLE INFERENCE

So that the conclusion we are forced to is that if constipation is chronic there is an anatomical reason for it—the intestines or their assistants are being in some manner deprived of the forces which give them power to do their work. It is for this real cause of the trouble that Osteopathy searches and its search is almost unflinching attended with success. Usually the seat of trouble is found at one of the sympathetic nerve centers of the spine. From these nerve centers branch out the nerves that control all the organs, as well as others, known as vaso-motor, which act upon the muscles controlling the blood vessels. If one of these nerves is being pressed upon by some part of the bony structure that has become ever so slightly out of its proper position, the effects are certain to be felt in the organ whose supply of nerve force or blood is being interrupted.

THE OSTEOPATH'S TREATMENT

Some such obstruction is almost invariably responsible for chronic constipation; and Osteopathy, through its expert knowledge of the normal relations and positions of the bodily parts, finds just where and how the interruption is taking place. The Osteopath then, by careful and scientific manipulation, replaces the part, restores natural conditions, and finally by gentle mechanical stimulation aids Nature in bringing about normal activity. The organs, quickened by new life, take up their natural tasks, and the condition of constipation is at an end.—The Right Way.
