OSTEOPATHY ASSISTS NATURE

Nature always tends toward the normal-toward recovery from disease. The time required to restore the normal depends upon the assistance or hindrance Nature meets with on the part of the physician. The Osteopath does not go against Nature by giving drugs, but by rational, scientific means assists normal processes to recover their equilibrium in the human system. Therefore he shortens the time which Nature requires to work a cure. Remember, it is always Nature that cures—the physician can never be more than Nature's assistant.
