NEW HOPE FOR DYSPEPTICS

This Osteopathic discovery which claims that some anatomical variation is usually at the bottom of chronic dyspepsia—and indeed is the foundation of gastritis, gastralgia, gastric ulcer and stomach dilation, bowel disturbances, constipation, diarrhoea, dysentery, liver and pancreatic ill as well—does not do away with the other time-honored causes which medical science has long since carefully catalogued and differentiated into their protean manifestations. It does not minimize the importance in digestive ill of overwork, mental and physical; of gastric irritants like alcohol, strong acids, excessive use of condiments, or too much tea or coffee; of dietetic errors such as too much food, badly cooked foods, hurried eating, eating between meals and eating too much sweets; of paracausal and liver disturbances, nor, especially of underlying diseases of the heart and kidneys and certain constitutional diseases which may produce dyspepsia as a mere symptom of other graver troubles.
