Explosion at the Telephone Office

What might have been a serious accident occurred at the Telephone office in this city, early last evening. W. Buzzard, one of the linemen, was melting wax in the back room with a gasoline torch for the purpose of fastening wires, when suddenly it blazed up the fire running up the wall burning it almost to a crisp for a few feet around. The fire in the room was soon extinguished causing little damage and while Mr. Buzzard was in the act of putting out the torch which he succeeded in carrying to the back yard, it exploded, burning him about the head and shoulders quite badly. John Williamson and others about the land office ran to his rescue and Mr. Buzzard claims that Mr. Williamson did heroic work in extinguishing the flames. At last accounts Mr. Buzzard is resting easy, and all concerned as well as the many friends of those about the telephone office congratulate them that it proved to be no worse.
