CLOSE OF 58th. CONGRESS

The 58th Congress passed into history two minutes before noon on March 4th, 1905 after a remarkable career as a legislative body. Many were the important laws that Congress placed upon the statute books, and many were the laws it tried to make and failed to agree upon. But the going out of the last Congress was amid a scene of good fellowship without a parallel in the history of the nation. When the last formal act had been performed and the house was only waiting the hour for the inaugural ceremonies to be given in the Senate Chamber, Mr. Payne of New York, moved that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock which was agreed upon. Mr. Payne said, "I am requested to give notice that there will be a joint caucus of Democrats and Republicans held immediately in this hall.

Mr. William Hepburn of Iowa then arose and said, "The caucus of the Democratic and Republican members of the fifty-eighth Congress will come to order. I am glad to recognize the fact that there are occasions when a mild type of a Republican like myself (laughter) can be permitted to preside over a Democratic caucus (laughter), and also I am glad that there is an occasion when I can ask the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, Mr. James Virginia Hay, the chairman of the Democratic committee, to preside over a Republican caucus." (applause)

Mr. Hay in taking the speaker's chair said, "I suppose this is the most unique occasion in the political history of this country. I do not believe there has ever been a joint caucus of this character before, and I certainly feel that I am peculiarly distinguished to be called upon to preside over it. The Caucus will come to order. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized."

Mr. Henry S. Boutell, in a very pretty address among many other things said, "The fifty-eighth Congress is rapidly approaching its close. During its three sessions the house has considered and passed, in addition to the great supply bills, an unusually large number of public measures of the first importance and far reaching influence as well as way beyond the average number of bills of local interests effecting every congressional district in the country. The measures have all been considered with exceptional candor and moderation, and the entire business of the House has been carried on without friction, and in harmony with the best thought with all the members of the House of both political parties."

At the close of Mr. Boutell's address he presented to the Speaker of the House, Joseph G. Cannon, a loving cup procured by the members for the occasion.

The prettiest speech made during the joint caucus was that of Mr. John S. Williams of Miss. the Democratic leader in the House, wherein he praised without stint, Speaker Cannon. After the speaker had been appropriately honored, Mr. Champ Clark of Mo. presented to Mr. Sharp Williams of Miss., the Democratic leader in the House, also with a beautiful loving cup in a neat speech, in which among many good things he said, "The historian of our times will record the fact that the fifty eighth Congress was distinguished above all its predecessors for the extraordinary kindness of feeling which prevailed among its members. Democrats were glad to honor Uncle Joe Cannon and the Republicans rejoiced to compliment the Democratic leader."
