Robert Love, the man who named the trial, poet laureate of Pike county commissioner extraordinary from Labadie Mo, to the Louisiana Purchase exposition, comedian and author etc, is in Portland. Not only that. He is in Portland to stay. Furthermore, he arrived this morning.

Thus far Mr Love has seen nobody but Frank Merrick, gatekeepers and newspaper men, to whose guild he belonged prior to the reconstruction period. Since then Mr Love has been merely an editor.

The object of his coming is to assume the management of the literary end of the bureau of publicity for the Lewis and Clark exposition. There will be something doing every minute from now on.

"I like this country," said Mr Love gazing past Merrick's spectacles and into a vacant lot across the street. "It is like home (home being Missouri) in many respects. We, of course, derive our moisture from the 60 or 70 breweries in St. Louis, while you get yours—and get it good—from a sphere quite as widely advertised, but less regular. Then, again, I admire the beautiful hills which surround you, and the river and the fire—we have here only four months of the year in our neighborhood—and the stately pine Portland Journal.
