Raise the License

The city council should certainly raise the license which for five dollars per day permits such "cattle" as for the past two days have been conducting a ring game on Adams avenue opposite J. M. Berry's store. The outfit consists of a greasy complexioned female associated with a big, strong, able bodied man. The writer has passed the "lay out" several times and in each instance the only spectators were boys ranging all the way from ten to fourteen years of age. It is simply a kindergarten for higher lessons in gambling, and we are sure that any parent who will investigate it will say that such surething games should be prohibited from entering the city, and the way to do this is to make the license so high that even the numerous dimes of the small boy will not be sufficient to warrant their sojourning in our city.
