EASTERN OREGON EXPERIMENT FARM

Editor Observer:—
I am creditably informed that the Eastern Oregon Experiment station at Union has been ordered discontinued.

If so, it is surely a great misfortune to this part of the state, as experiments made in Western Oregon are of no practical value to us, as climatic conditions, soil, etc., are entirely different. While we will have to admit that the location of our station was not just what it should have been to do the most good for us, yet we do know that it has been a great help to us and was fast becoming a nucleus around which was being formed a closer relationship of our farmers with experiment station work and surely was lending to much good.

A suggestion has been made that probably the station might be retained by disposing of a greater part of the land now owned and securing some of the more arid lands, and continue experiments along the line of getting something to grow on our drier soils which are the most in need of development.

I would like to hear from you people on this very important subject.
