EXPERIENCE OF A CAMPING PARTY

Fun, Frolic, Trials and Tribulations Recorded by One of the Party

On Monday morning, August 7, a company consisting of Rev. J. F. Day and family, B. Cowen and family and Mrs. Robt. Moore and daughter, and a wagon laden with everything needful to make camping comfortable, climbed the hills to Morgan Lake, establishing there a very delightful camp equipped with all the latest improvements. As it was nearly noon when we reached our destination, dinner was the first number on the program. After dinner we proceeded to get our camp in order. Tents were pitched, awnings put up and tables and benches constructed, so that by night we were decidedly at home.

Each succeeding day brought its pleasures and also its troubles, and swarms of yellow jackets. One of our greatest trials was the exceeding freshness of some of our party, as it required large quantities of salt to keep them from spoiling even in the cool nights we enjoyed up there. We had for amusement, croquet, finch and pit games. Boating on the lake was a source of much pleasure to all. This last week being somewhat cool, it was necessary to build camp fires to keep comfortably warm, and in cutting the wood to build the same, Mrs. Moore distinguished herself as the champion of the camp. Mrs. Day may justly pride herself on her skill in cooking, especially pancakes. I never did see pancakes disappear quite as they did in our camp. In fact everything just simply vanished when the jolly eleven were seated around our table. Mr.

Cowen, being exceedingly fond of pine gum, conceived the idea of using his hat crown as a convenient place to store the surplus gum in. But alas! one day it was very warm and the gum feeling the effect of the heat sought another store house, resulting in the loss of a lock or two of hair but doing no further damage. Quite a number of the La Grande people visited us in camp Sunday. Game was very scarce, and Mr. Day being quite a sportsman was accordingly disappointed. But his disappointment was somewhat lessened when called to get his rifle and shoot an innocent owl in a tree right in camp. It is needless to state that he lost no time in going after that owl. Mrs. Cowen discovered that horse hair makes a good mattress when used judiciously. There were many other important discoveries made, but for lack of time were not developed.

One last night in camp was destined to be a memorable one. While the crowd was deeply interested in a game of "Pit", a real live ghost suddenly appeared on the scene, causing quite a commotion and nearly a stampede. Then shortly after her ghostship retired, a strange man made his appearance. He was cordially greeted however, and spent the night in camp, but in the morning was nowhere to be found. Fortunately he left his clothes so in all probability he will be identified soon.

We broke camp at 8:30 Friday morning each one feeling that our time spent in the hills was one to be long remembered by all. CAMPER
