LIGHTS AND SIDELIGHTS

I read the papers and I know that some of the old line life insurance companies have been taking money that rightly belonged to the policy holders and putting it in circulation in channels where it did not belong. That shows that the officers are rascals. (Say, you old line fellers, just sit down and keep your mouths shut until I get through talking.)

The trouble with fraternal insurance is that you never know when they are going to kite the rates on you. You pay in your money for years and then the first thing you know you are raised out. (You fraternal chaps will please quit requiring for a minute.) There is all kinds of room for improvement in both kinds of life insurance, but that is no reason why a man with a family dependent upon him should not carry any life insurance. Class dismissed.—Beriah Jadson.

Dave Hill says in all his life He never kissed a woman; Although we hate to doubt Dave's word We think him scarcely human. The man who never kissed a woman And never has been kissed May know a lot and yet he never will Know just what he's missed.

David B. Hill actually confessed, confessed mind you and to a New York reporter, that in all the whole course of his busy life he never kissed a woman. Never kissed a woman! What joy, what bliss, what ecstasy the life of the great man has been robbed of. Never kissed a woman. Never attended a country dance and danced with your lovely partner to the sonorous music of a ball fiddle and then when the dance was over led the lady to some quiet nook of the rambling farm building and there kissed her again and again—kissed her until she admitted that she liked the sensation? Never attended singing school and escorted your partner home on a pleasant summer night and when the home of the young lady was finally reached and you said goodnight at the gate over and over again and each time you whispered the words your lips met those of the young lady in one of these long lingering, luscious kisses?

Never attended a city dance and waltzed with your partner to the entrancing strains of a high class orchestra, then when the dance was over led the fair one past the frappe bowl and into the conservatory and there in the shade of ferns and palms you went through oculatory exercises that caused you to thrill for hours afterwards? Never kissed a woman, Dave? You had better go get into a monastery, or better still, go kiss some one.
