OSTEOPATHY AND MASSAGE

Sam Jones aptly defines the difference between them as, "That of playing a piano and carrying a lion." "Massage is a system of rubbing, stroking and kneading the body for the purpose of modifying nutrition."

"Osteopathy is a system of treating all curable diseases by correcting the cause thereof, which is found in displacement of bones, usually of spine, ribs or pelvis, and in the non-structure of muscles or ligaments. Massage is learned by a few instructions on movements, and relies on the doctor and medicine as of old Osteopathy is learned by strenuous study of three years of nine months each (against the three to four years of six months each, of the medical schools), and treats all diseases, as records show, most successfully, without recourse to drugs or drug doctors."

A significant fact: Medical doctors almost always wage bitter war against Osteopathy, while the measure is made his contemporary and assistant.
