Fools May Laugh

If you want to make an old school doctor real, raving, roaring mad, all you have to do is to whisper in his ear "Osteopathy." This, you know, is simply the science and practice of curing diseases without drugs. It makes no pretense of "gifts of healing," or any of that Tommy rot, but employs natural methods. Any doctor will tell you that the practice of medicine is an experiment—a two-dollar-a-visit experiment, as it were. To say that osteopathy has effected no cures is to state what is absolutely false.

It does not claim to cure in every case, but how many physicians are there who will guarantee to do this? The osteopath regards the human frame as a perfect and intricate machine, faultlessly constructed by the divine Master Mechanic. His practice is to keep the human mechanism in perfect order. To overcome mal-adjustments is to overcome the causes of disease. It does the work. It gets cured, and "results are what tell." "Fools may laugh but he who laughs last, laughs best." "Osteopathy."
