OSTEOPATHS AND DRUGS

At present the healing profession is much aroused over an article going the rounds of the medical journals by Dr N C Thrust, (M. D.), charging the Osteopaths with using drugs. This is but another use of ambiguity in promulgating a falsehood, by an unscrupulous man by whom the medical profession is hampered.

True, Osteopaths use drugs, anti-septics, antitoxins in poison and anaesthetics in surgery, just as you use soap and water to cleanse, or pull thorns from the flesh.

But the use of drugs for the cure of disease is understood by medical men and repeatedly held by the courts to be "The internal administration of remedies for the purpose of modifying the physiological or pathological processes." Now, why should the Osteopaths follow this when it is exactly opposite his teachings and belief, and when he has at his command means for handling all curable diseases which he is daily demonstrating to be more effective, surer, and leaving no evil results?
