SEPTIC TANK SEWER

The sewerage question which is always an important one, relating as it does to the health of every community is coming more and more to be solved by means of the septic tank in small cities and towns. It is said Much has been said about this subject and the experiments which have been made have proved its practicability according to health authority as a perfectly sanitary method of disposing of sewage. The septic tank has been used in Oregon for several years both on private and public properties. One was installed at the Oregon Blind School at Salem in 1903 and two are in use at the State Insane Asylum at Salem. Wherever used they are giving excellent satisfaction and will probably come into common use throughout the state within the next few years.

At the request of the Oregon State Board of Health, Dr. E A Pierce of Salem wrote a treatise on septic tanks which gives some valuable data upon this subject. In describing the process, he says: "In the septic tank system the sewerage is passed slowly through the tank, out of contact with light and air, allowing time for the organic matter to be broken down by vegetable organisms. All the results of the process are harmless to animal life and free from odors."

Cement, it is stated, is the best material to use in the construction of the tank. "A pit of the required size should be dug allowing about four cubic feet to each person, plus the thickness of the walls of the tank. A wooden frame corresponding to the size of the tank should then be set in the excavation after the bottom has been prepared and the cement poured around the outside and allowed to harden, leaving the walls from six to eight inches thick. If the tank is for a small number of persons I would suggest that a partition extend across the inside of the bottom of the tank, 22 inches high and four inches thick. The wooden frame should be removed as soon as the cement is hard enough to permit. The top may be covered with an arched roof cement with a manhole, or with planking, and if the tank is of sufficient size it may have simply a shingle roof. If the tank is large, say 30 feet long, I would suggest that a baffle board be placed eight feet from the inlet, extending down crosswise to within two feet of the bottom. Eighteen feet from the inlet I would recommend placing a weir or solid partition of cement, extending from the bottom of the tank to within 10 inches of the surface, and I would have another baffle board like the former six feet from the outlet. The pipe leading to the tank should be at least four inches in diameter, with an elbow and pipe extending 18 inches below the surface of the scum. The outlet should be three or four inches in diameter with an elbow extending 18 inches below the surface. One or more intakes and outlets should be used, according to the size of the tank. They should be on an exact level. The pipe leading to the tank should have just enough fall to convey the sewage, avoiding as much as possible the disturbance of the tank."—Oregonian.

Esther Last Night

The production of "Esther the Beautiful Queen" last night was more of a success than ever. While the house that greeted the performers was not as large, the production went off more smoothly than on the preceding night. As the curtain had been more used to the stage a saving of twenty minutes over the time of Wednesday night was made.

The singers of the leading roles added new laurels to their already large wreaths and the members of the chorus acquitted themselves in splendid shape. The scarf drill was better executed than ever and the audience joined the king's court in the applause more than once.

Mr Robinson leaves tomorrow morning for Baker City where he will arrange for a production of one of his operas, and from there he will visit Pendleton, The Dalles and Walla Walla.
