To Be Hoped

It is to be hoped that arrangements can be made whereby the well which is now down over eight hundred feet on the Peter McDonald farm can now be continued to at least 1500 or 2000 feet. For years the idea of artesian water has been considered practical by all who have had experience in such matters in connection with our general surroundings. Several attempts have been made to sink deep wells but this one is probably the deepest, and unfortunately, work on this has come to rather sudden termination before it reached a depth that is of any material advantage towards solving whether or not artesian water is obtainable in this valley at a depth that would be practicable.

OSTEOPATHY PREVENTS DISEASE

The Osteopathic idea of the prevention of disease is to keep the body supplied with pure blood. "That a natural flow of the blood is health," is the cornerstone of the Os's pathic theory. All germ diseases are caused by the deposit and development of a specific germ in the tissues, but from an Osteopathic standpoint there must be a suitable soil for their growth or they will be destroyed. Once let the vitality be lowered in any organ or part, let the circulation become sluggish or stagnant in that area, and a fruitful soil is prepared for the development and multiplication of disease germs. This is how we "catch diseases."
