ONLY TWO PARTIES IN NEXT ELECTION

Things will be doing in politics very soon. A primary election in April will decide the fates of many aspirants for political honors. Several Eastern Oregon men are looking to this event with much anxiety, but the only man who is easy in his conscience and without apparent worry is C. A. Johns, the avowed candidate for governor, who has had the unheard of temerity to say through the newspapers that he was not going to make a stumping campaign and would not buy space at so much a yard. Eastern Oregon people are anxious to secure some of the honors at the next election, and while they may have an opportunity to vote for a United States congressman to succeed Williamson should the latter resign, they still think there are other matters in which they have just as much interest.

At the last general election in Oregon the vote cast entitles only the Republican and Democratic parties to representation as parties on the next state ticket. All of the other parties failed to poll sufficient votes to get them a place on the list. Anybody can run independently for any state office or any local office in his precinct. For any state office the petitioner at the primaries must have two per cent of the voters in his favor. County officers must secure three per cent of the voters. New parties, or political organizations formed with new names and under new auspices can get on the ticket by filing petitions containing five per cent of the voters in the precinct.

Viewing these provisions of the state law most of the old time politicians have withdrawn from an active campaign on the ground that life is too short to fool with politics until the fool law has been amended.—Democrat.

Osteopathy

New Hope For Dyspeptics

Digestion depends upon two factors, muscular activity and glandular action. The first to churn the food and mix it with the fluids. The second, to secrete the digestive fluids which moisten and dissolve the foods that the nutritious part may be separated from the waste and absorbed by the blood. Deprive the stomach of its muscular action, the food is not mixed with the fluids nor propelled on its way. Deprived of its digestive fluids, the food is not softened nor digested, so cannot pass the pylorus, the outlet of the stomach. In either case, the food remains in the stomach to ferment, decay and form noxious gases, burning pains, fullness, distress, etc.

Muscular activity depends upon the nerve supply being correct. Glands secrete their fluids from the blood brought to them, and are active or torpid depending on the nerve force they receive.

Therefore, the Osteopath labors to secure a proper and healthy nerve and blood supply. By so doing, he not only relieves, but cures dyspepsia.
