THE FIRST FRUIT FAILURE IN OREGON

In the fall of 1844 an immigrant train near where the thrifty village of Hilgard now stands. The long journey from the Missouri river, with no feed for the oxer and horses that drew their wagons, but the wild grass they could crop after each wearisom days travel. From the south pass through the Rocky Mountains, grass was dry as hay and from the Pacific Springs, now in Wyoming, the first water on this side of the continental back bone that flowed into the Pacific ocean, was scarce and what little the animals could often covered with alkaline dust, had reduced the strength of the teams so, that it seemed impossible for them to drag the wagons up the Blue mountains to Lee's encampment," now Meacham and the remaining three hundred miles of the ourney to the white settlement in Oregon

The older men and heads of the families that composed the train were convinced that to enable the emaciated oxen to drag the wagons over the Blue mountains and the rest of the journey their oads must be lightened by throwing away everything not absolutely necessary for use on the way. It was a sad but imperative duty to overhaul the contents of the dusty wagons and determine what should be abandoned. Family keep sakes. books, even family bibles, pots, and kettles were thrown out. Some of the wagons were coupled shorter so that some of the weight could be sawed off the wagon

In one of the wagons belonging to Samuel K. Barlow there was a box of several hundred grafts of choice orchard fruit scions that his son William, a lad of some eighteen years had started with from Illinois in the early spring and carefully watered and cared for all the spring and ner and kept growing. Young William Barlow had built many day dreams of what honor and profit he would win by taking to Oregon the first grafted fruit the fruit industry in Oregon, but fate was and soil to keep the grafts growing, and ank of the Grande Ronde river and it was left for others to reap a fortune and go down in history as the father of the fruit industry in Oregon. All that was left for him to do was to sit on the cast away box and weep, and then resume his weary journey, which after struggling with forest and snows and the abandonment of all the wagons in the Cascade mountains ended on Christmas day 1844. when the older members a foot and the children in baskets strapped on cows entered Oregon City.

While young William Barlow was weeping because of his disappointment in having to abandon his box of grafts there was not then in all Oregon a grafted tree. With the prophetic vision common to pioneers he saw a big future industry and that vision has been realized. In 1900, but 55 years after his misfortune, the orchards of what was then Oregon. Idaho, Washington and Oregon; grew fruits on 12,962,571 trees, valued at $2,270,726.

Oregon is loser again. With only one this state will lose three fourths of the innual free distribution of seeds. Why don't the bunch resign; can't they see how the state is suffering.

There was a bull fight the other day at Giudad Juarez, near El Paso, Texas. I' was given for the benefit of the delegates o the mining congress. One matador was badly gored and another was carried out bruised and bleeding after a bull had tossed him in the air. The arena was packed with Americans, including many vomen. Most of the Americans left lowever, after human blood had been pilled, refusing to witness the continuation of the brutal sport. Their departure at that time was the next best thing to not having gone to the fight at all.

A Creeping Death.

Blood poison creeps up toward the seart, causing death. J. E. Steams. Belle Plaine, Minn., writes that a friend freadfully injured his hand, which len's Arnica Salve drew out the poison. nealed the wound, and saved his life. Best in the world for burns and sores. 25c at Newlin's Drug Store.
