FRIDAY DECEMBER FIFTEENTH

Managers will tell you no matter how strong or impressive a play may be be woman, who in everday life would swoon at such a small thing as a mouse, seldom faint in a threatre. Two American stars have had the experience, within a few months, of locking over the footlights to see women fainting in their seats The terrible prison scene in "Resurrection" which Miss Blanche Bates played ast season, had its swooning victims in the audience, and the horrors of the great third act in "Ghosts" the Ibsen drama, in which Mr. Harry Mestayer is starring, has wrought so upon the nerves of woman in the audience that they have fainted. It is in the third act that the notable struggle between Oswald Alving and his mother occurs, and the climax of the act has been called, by James Huneker, the great critic of the New York Sun the most fearful climax in contemporary drama" "Ghosts" will be presented at the Stewards Opera house, Friday Dec. 15.

EAGLE'S NIGHT

The McEwen entertainment last night received more attention than at any previous evening. Some new features were introduced and all the old ones repro-duced. The entertainment was up to the usual standard, but the committee of leading Eagles failed to be in evidence. The subjects used were the same who have been upon the stage at each of the other demonstrations. From appearances some one must have had an acute case of cold feet. Tonight winds up the week of hypnotic fun and education.
