In that Land of Plenty the cow is made one of the Family

Many centuries ago a crusty old ascetic named Saint Columbia, came over to Scotland to convert the wild tribes to his raligious way of thinking. He located on the Island of Iona, and the first decree he issued was that the people should have no cows. The reason assigned is characteristic of all gloomy celibates who spend their lives in secluded monasteries. Where there is a cow there will be a woman," said Saint Columbia, "and where there is a woman there will be mischief." As the result of this stupid and fanitical outgiving the lonans wire deprieved of the supreme luxury which comes from keeping cows. It is-true, as this ancient acolyte remarked, that wherever there is a cow there will be a woman, but what finer combination was ever brought together, a union of the two chief blessings bestowed on man? Wherever there is a cow ought to be a woman, and wherever there is a woman we naturally look around for the cow. They compliment each other: they belong in the same category of usefulness and gentleness. A woman can get more milk from a cow than a man. Cows hate men and will kick them. No cow ever kicks a woman or steps in her milk bucket. Successful dairy people know this quite well, and are now employing women to do their milking. The cow yields readily to the gentle voice of woman, and likes to have her udder stroked by a woman's soft hand, Man's trusque ways and rough hands startle her, and his hoarse voice is not agreeable when it wakens Brindle from her dreams of clover and bran mush.

Holland is a country where the cow and the woman reign supreme. The cows ndeed, are a part of the family, and one f the latter always sleeps in the stable to watch. The cow stable is generally a large building, paved with brick, upon which the cows lie in the absence of straw, which is scarce. There is a brick paved passage down the center, at the end of which is a fireplace and the windows are covered with white curtains, as dainty as those used in the house proper. Sometimes the entire family will gather in the stable in the evenings, enjoying the warmth of the fire and exchanging the talk of the day, while the cattle, always placed with their heads facing the central passage, chew their cuds and almost seem to enjoy the human compa nionship. Surely the imagination of poet nor artist ever conjured up a more domestic scene than, this. The woman and the cow in close juxtaposition the woman busy with her knitting needle. peace and effection, and the cow gazing on with her lustrous eyes waiting patiently to be milked. Burns must have had this scene in view when he wrote his infinitely tender "Cotter's Saturday Night." Yes, cows love women, and for the same reason that all other living things love them, and the dairy proves, as few other places do, what great factors love and kindness are in all the affairs of life.

The Dutch are a happy people, and nothing contributes more to their enjoyment than their home-like herds of cows They are also an important factor in the national prosperity, few countries excelling Holland in the output of superior Contractor and Builder milk and butter. Because of the fertility of the pas urage and the care taken in their keep, the cows are capable of giving large yeilds of rich milk. In no place in the world are cows made as much of and from the annual yeild of butter it would seem that the care is not taken vain.

Saved By Dynamite

Sometimes, a flaming city is saved by dynamiting a space that the fire can't cross. Sometimes, a cough hangs on so long, you feel as if nothing but dynamite would cure it. Z. T. Gray, of Calhoun. Ga., writes: "My wife had a very aggravated cough, which kept her awake nights. Two physicians could not help orders for engraved visiting cards as a her; so she took Dr. King's New Disresult of the advertising we have been covery for Consumption, Coughs and doing for the past two weeks. Those Colds, which eased her cough, gave her wishing extra fine work should give us a sleep, and finally cured her." Strictly scientific cure for bronchitis and La Grippe, for sale by Newlin Drug Co.
