be serious as no bones are broken.

IT REASONS WELL

Do not deaden a crying nerve with opium but remove the prop that makes the outcry. Nerves are intelligent and they do not cry "wolf!" unless there is cause for it. It would be one way to restore confidence in the sheep fold by giving the lambs something to destroy all sense of fear at the approach of the devourer; but it would not make for their welfare. Nor does opium or other drugs which deaden the nervous system, protect the body against the ravages of disease. It simply paralyzes the usual action of the nerves by which the body is warned of its enemy—disease.

The Osteopath seeks the prod that causes the pain of gastralgia, the twitching of St. Vitus dance, or the lethargy of paralysis. He removes it when that is possible, and the sensible nerves cease their cry. Pain is the prayer of the body for relief, not the asking for nerve intoxication. Let your nerves think for you.
If they tell you there is trouble, go to an Osteopath. Your body needs not doping but good engineering.
