A FIRE ON BOARD THE TRANSPORT

(Scripps News Association)
San Francisco, Feb. 1.—Fire which broke out in the United States transport Meade, lying at the dock at the foot of Folsom street, shortly before midnight caused the death of three men by suffocation and a score of others, mostly firemen were injured.

The dead are Fire Captain, Charles Daken, of engine No. 4, Thomas Hennessy of the same company and third officer G. Walbos of the Meade. All were suffocated while fighting fire in the hold. The fire started in the forward hold and spread rapidly to the cargo which consisted of 5,000 tons of commissary and quartermaster supplies, consigned for the Philippines.

The Meade was scheduled to sail for Manila today with 1,000 soldiers. The city firemen responded to the alarm and aided the crew in fighting flames which threatened to destroy the ship, and it was only by heroic effort that they succeeded in keeping the fire in the coal bunkers and ammunition stores. In quick succession the bodies of the bodies of the suffocated men were carried from the hold, where they had gone at the risk of their lives and it was only by prompt action of their comrades that many lives were saved from death. Captain Dakin was found at the foot of the ladder leading to the smoke filled hold. In an effort to rescue Dakin Fireman McGroarty fell unconscious and his body was carried out with Dakin.

The loss as yet has not been ascertained. The forepart of the ship, where the fire broke out, contained the personal effects of the officers of the 2d infantry and battalion of light artillery. Many thrilling and heroic rescues marked the fire. Capt. Geo. Wilson, of the Meade, fell down the hatchway and lay unconscious within reach of the flames when Chief Officer Lassack and others of the crew rushed into the hold and brought back his limp form. Lassack, himself was overcome by the fumes and was rescued by Fireman Cook.

Eighteen thousand dollars in gold, military treasure, destined for the Philippines, was carried by the soldiers to a place of safety on the dock. Captain Gilgirt, of the fire department, was overcome three times by smoke, returning time and time again to his work, until finally carried away unconscious. The damage to the transport Meade will amount to less than one hundred thousand dollars. The damage to the cargo is very small. Major Dovol, superintendent of the transport service has appointed a board of inquiry to investigate the cause of the fire and to fix the responsibility of the deaths.

The bodies of fireman Dakin and Hennessy were found in the hold after the smoke had cleared away. Hennessy was still alive but died in a few minutes. In the aft hold of the ship there were thousands of pounds of ammunition, had this ignited, the ship and all of the occupants would have been blown to pieces. The fire is believed to have started from the lime in the cargo.

Many of the firemen and crew were overcome by smoke and are now in the hospital. The reported missing firemen have now all been located.

CAPTAIN COUSINS CHARGED WITH WILFUL NEGLECT

(Scripps News Association)

Seattle, Feb. 1.—A great sensation was caused this morning in the court room when Captain Wallace Langley, who has been a pilot in Vancouver waters for many years, and who was on board the Quisen when she was sent to the rescue, testified that no effort was made to save the passengers of the wrecked steamer Valencia. He said that there was no question but that life boats could have reached the wreck, and the steamer too, could have gotten much nearer, had the proper effort been made. It was his opinion that many lives could have been saved had the proper effort been made. He says that he saved a vessel not many months ago which was wrecked not two hundred yards from the Valencia, during worse weather. He also removed much heavy machinery and dismantled the vessel. Captain Beacher, a pilot of the Pacific Coast, took the side of the company in the investigation. Captain Langley severely criticized the tug Coar for not having gone nearer the distressed vessel, and stated that had she acted in the proper spirit she could have saved the lives of those in the rigging.

Bunker is here and sticks by every charge which he has made and demands a rigid investigation by the federal board of inquiry. He charges Captain Cousins with wilful neglect, saying he could have saved the lives of the passengers on board the Valencia if he had tried. He says many passengers were still in the rigging when the steamer Quisen left on order of Pharo. Many damage suits will be filed in the federal court this week.

The Topeka today brought six survivors of the wrecked Valencia. They are: F. Lehn, freight clerk; P. Fluhrne, baker; William Raymond, messman; J. Primer, fireman; J. Welsh, waiter; P. O'Brien, waiter. Each survivor had a graphic story to tell of the awful tragedy. They were of the same opinion as Captain Cann, that the rough sea made it impossible for either the Quisen or the Topeka to save any more than they did.

Frank Lehn, the freight clerk, was affectionately greeted by the members of his family. He praises Captain Cann of the work of picking up the life raft with the nineteen passengers aboard. Lehn says he and the others of the Valencia crew begged the women to go aboard the life raft when the steamer Quisen first came in sight. "As we pulled away," he said, "we could see the poor souls huddled together on the after deck. How I pitied them as I realized that theirs was a lingering death. We had little hope of saving our own lives but there was a chance."

The other survivors say the life preservers were in good condition.
