MILK TALK No. 2.

CLEANLINESS

As milk is the natural food for the young, containing within itself all the requirements of the body, and as any adulteration is injurious to the system, (either from absorption or otherwise) therefore the health of the consumer, and especially the young, depend to a great extent upon those who handle the milk. And as there are so many ways in handling the cow as well as the milk after being drawn from the cow. Every consumer should visit the place from whence he gets his milk (no matter if it is surrounded by a high board fence) and see how the cow, and the milk are handled before using it as a food for the baby.

This is one of the best musical institutions in the state, and that people in this city and valley are beginning to discover the advantage of this school. The school is divided into two departments; No. 1 is for beginners from 5 years or more and are taught the first three grades. Pupils come one hour each day. This is no kindergarten system but far superior. In No. 2 the grades are from 2 to 8. Here they graduate. Pupils take one or two lessons a week as they desire. OREGON'S SENIOR SENATOR PROPOSES IMPORTANT BILL

He Offers Amendment to the Senate Rate Bill Which is Viewed as the First to Make the Law Affective.

(Observer Special)

Washington, D. C., Feb. 20.—As the rate regulation bill reaches the voting stage in the Senate, it is found that the first amendment proposed in that body, which was by the senior Oregon senator, carried the substance of the court-review provision which the Senate insists upon.

At the time that Senator Fulton offered his amendment to the leading measure in the Senate, discussion of the question had not been indulged this session on the floor. His statement did not receive greater attention than that tributes for its clearness and argument and legal accuracy. But soon after the Fulton amendment was submitted and spoken upon, the Hepburn bill came from the House, having no provision for court review. Champions of the Hepburn measure argued that the implied right of the courts to review when confiscatory rates were imposed, made it unnecessary to incorporate such a clause in the proposed law.

Sensors began an exhaustive research into the legal aspects of the proposition, with the result that it soon developed that the best lawyers consulted thought a specific statement regarding review of the acts by the Interstate Commerce Commission should be incorporated into the proposed law. Some held that the specific right of review should be granted not only when a rate imposed by the commission was confiscatory, but when a prima facie case had been made out of the unreasonableness of the rate. These thought the court should be authorized to review, and, after finding the rate unreasonable toward either side, should have explicit authority to impose a reasonable rate.

When a general consensus of the Senate's views was gathered from the several presentations, it began to be apparent that Senator Fulton's amendment had expressed the consensus early. In other words, the Oregon senator was credited by many friends with having anticipated developments, through careful legal research, and with being the pioneer in the effort to have the law conform to the best judicial sentiment of the times regarding such matters.

A New York attorney has just furnished an interesting analysis of the legal situation, through the New York Sun, this opinion being extensively printed throughout the east. This clearly confirms the pioneer argument of the Oregon senator. The Post, of Washington, in caricaturing the advent of the Hepburn bill in the Senate, had the Oregon man's features upon the senator who was standing by ready to amend with a cleaver.

But, instead of Senator Fulton being placed in the light of the champion of any given side, his amendment and argument made upon it, are now being viewed by prominent attorneys as the first advanced work to make the law effective and sufficiently sound to withstand the legal strain to which it will be immediately subjected.

1872, and later they met with J. C. Breeze and John Gilbert, all of Excelsior lodge No. 12, of San Francisco, and with others asked for a dispensation to organize a lodge in Portland, which was granted by Supreme Chancellor Berry on Christmas day 1872. John Gilbert was commissioned as the instituting officer and Excelsior Lodge No. 1 of Portland was instituted January 26, 1873. At different times it has been consolidated with other lodges and is known as Oregon No. 1.

OSTEOPATHY IN NERVE TROUBLES

As Osteopathy deals with nerves very largely, and makes a more thorough study of their duties and their sufferings than any other school, it is not at all strange that it has achieved better results in the treatment of nervous diseases than old methods have ever attained. No stimulant is administered to whip the jaded nerves into action, no sedative given to make it seem as if pain and suffering had departed. The actual cause of the derangement is hunted down and made normal again. So that cures wrought by this method, although not always rapid, are permanent cures every time. And usually very speedy relief is secured.

THE CORN GROWING SCHOOL

(Observer Special)

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 20.—A special train, carrying what may be called a school on corn growing on board, started from here early this morning, over the Illinois Central railroad, to make a tour of about two thousand miles for the purpose of instructing farmers in the visited districts in the best methods of raising corn. The plan of sending out this train was undertaken by the Illinois Central railroad without any idea of immediate returns. The tour will last twelve days and will cost the railroad company about $12,000. The train consists of six cars and will stop at 126 cities, towns and crossroad stations. Each stop will be of forty minutes duration, during which there will be a lecture on seed and soil. The tour is in charge of Professor Hopkins of the University of Illinois, who is assisted by several professors from various agricultural schools. Representatives of the Illinois Central accompany the train and will tell of the results in the way of increased shipments that have come from improved methods of farming.
