OUR FOREIGN POLICY

Our foreign policy and the modifications which it is thought to be undergoing at the present time furnish a topic which has elicited several notable addresses in the Senate and a vigorous discussion by the press in all sections of the country. The discussion has assumed various phases. The arrangement made by the President for the collection of custom duties in Santo Domingo is one and perhaps the most acute phase. The sending of delegates to the Morocco Conference is another. These two events and some recent interpretations of the Monroe doctrine as made by President Roosevelt and Secretary Taft have brought that historic policy again to the front. The powers of the President in foreign matters and the constitutional powers of the Senate have been involved in the discussion. And, finally, the decision of the Democratic Senators to take caucus action against the Santo Domingo treaty, and the revolt from the caucus of Senator Patterson, of Colorado, have created something like a political sensation.

The Santo Domingo treaty was negotiated by the President and placed before the Senate last year. That body adjourned without action and the treaty, therefore, remained pending. Shortly after the adjournment of the Senate, the President received a cablegram which may become historic. In the usual economical verbiage of cablegrams, it informed the President that the Santo Domingo Government, under the pressure of foreign creditors and of domestic peril, offered to place in charge of the custom-houses in its Southern ports and in four Northern ports a citizen of the United States, under whose administration of the customs 45 per cent. of the money was to go to the Dominican Government and 55 per cent. to be deposited in New York for distribution among the nation's creditors after ratification of the pending treaty. The creditors were all or practically all willing to accept such an arrangement. It was made. President Roosevelt "nominated" for receiver of the duties Colonel George R. Colton, a retired officer of the United States army. He was appointed by President Morales, and he entered upon his duties. The arrangement is one somewhat similar to that provided for in the pending treaty, but there are differences. Senator Spooner thinks the differences are important. Senator Tillman thinks they are unimportant and charges the President with usurpation of power in making such an arrangement when the treaty was still pending.

Many cities of the Northwest are taking an unusual interest in those things that work for the permanent beautifying of their cities. The basic principle however being cleanliness. Such actions are worthy of emulation and La Grande could stand a movement along these lines as well as other cities.

There is a bill before the Ohio legislature to empower physicians with the authority to take life, in such cases where in their judgement there is no hope for the patient, and death would be a blessing. No doubt the author of the bill was prompted with the most humanitarian motives and there are many such cases where the execution of such a law would undoubtedly be a blessing, but nevertheless we doubt the wisdom of granting power to any, to take life, for in too many cases innocent life would be sacrificed when large financial interests would be involved by the passing away of the deceased.
