JUDGE LOWELL

From the star chamber of the few this state has appealed to the caucus of the many and the primary law, now an experiment, will increase in favor as its power in political emancipation is demonstrated. The law is not on trial. Its value, if popular government means anything, is axiomatic. The average judgment of all the people is usually right. Temporarily a part may be swayed by passion or prejudice, but never all, and safer by far are our institutions in the hands of the proletariat than under the control of the plutocracy. Public sentiment will sustain this law.

The mass of men are honest and can never be debauched by money or place. If, therefore, the whole party will participate in the primary elections, political cleanliness will be assured, jobbery and corruption will disappear, and government of the people will be re-enthroned. The duty of citizenship demands full registration and participation in the approaching primaries. The old system failed absolutely. We can make the new triumphant.

The combinations of capital, known as corporations, have come to stay. They are a part of the life of the world, and no thinking man expects or desires that there shall be a return to primitive business conditions. But so recognizing their necessity, it is the duty of the people to hedge them with such regulations that they shall cease to trespass upon either the interests of the public or the prerogatives of the Government, either in courts or Congress.—Extracted from Judge Lowell's Salem speech.

The next session of the Oregon State Grange will doubtless reaffirm its position in regard to securing an act of the legislature to reduce the husband's right of courtesy one-half, making it just equal to the dower right. Under our present law the husband has a life estate in all his wife's property, while she has a life estate in only one-half of his property. This law should be made the same for both. It came before the last legislature as House Bill No. 275. It passed the House, but was held up in the judiciary committee of the Senate.

The Paris Exposition had its Eiffel Tower, Chicago its Ferris Wheel, Buffalo its Electric Tower, and St. Louis its Cascades, but the Jamestown Exposition will have as its great feature a monster pier and it will eclipse any one feature that has been suggested to make exposition.
