The Simplicity Of Truth AND WHY GREAT DISCOVERIES ARE OFTEN SO LONG DELAYED.—HOW DR. STILL CONCENTRATED ALL HIS FORCE ON ONE SUBJECT AND EVOLVED OSTEOPATHY.

When we think it all over we invariably come to the conclusion that the greatest and grandest and most vitally important truths are the very simplest ones. Who of us all has not, coming upon a truth of this kind for the first time, marveled that it should so long have escaped him, that he should so often pass it by in thought without perceiving it?

Such a failure to follow thought to its rational conclusion is simply evidence that our minds have not been properly concentrated upon that particular subject. The calls upon our brain force have been many and varied; so that we have been left without mental energy to grasp and encompass a truth—even when it is perhaps of the most vital importance to us. Yet when that truth is later laid before us we are likely to be disconcerted by its almost startling simplicity. It seems that we should have always known it.

When there comes a man who absolutely concentrates upon a single line of thought, sticking to it through thick and thin—simple truths are likely to be uncovered that have long escaped attention and whose finding enriches the world. Such a man is Dr. A. T. Still, whose researches brought Osteopathy into being, who developed it into a complete science, and who, in his young old age, is witnessing its increasing triumph over disease.

When a boy of ten, suffering one day from a sick headache, Dr. Still stretched himself upon the ground, pillow his neck upon a rope slung between two trees. Soon the headache and nausea disappeared; and in his autobiography Dr. Still declares this to have been his first real discovery in Osteopathy. He marvelled at the quick relief procured and followed the treatment whenever he had a headache for years afterward, with unvarying success. But it was not until he reached the age of thirty, when he had become an anatomist of no mean ability, that he began to understand WHY his headache disappeared under such treatment.

For fifty years Dr. Still has labored to master the workings of the body machinery—to acquire a perfect knowledge of anatomy and to learn new and effective ways of applying his knowledge. The science of Osteopathy, which treats and cures diseases of every character without the use of drugs, is the result of his researches. Its success has been great. More people are investigating the system and benefitting by it constantly; and the common wonder of all is why so simple and rational an application of anatomical knowledge and mechanics was not conceived and put into operation long before.

EDWARDS EXPECTING SOLDIERS

Though no soldiers have yet arrived on the reservation. Major O. C. Edwards is hourly expecting the patrol that has been promised him from Walla Walla. In the report made by Captain Gray, who was here Saturday, 20 troopers were recommended for the task of guarding the reservation roads. This force is to be divided into two squads of 100 men each. One will be stationed at the Cayuse bridge, while the other will have headquarters on McKay creek.

With such a patrolling force at his command, Major Edwards says he can enforce the orders given him to prevent stockmen from crossing the reservation. But unless he has assistance, he declares it will be impossible for him to carry out the orders of the department. For 10 days past the major has been tagging the roads by night and he says he has had all of such experience he desires. Also, his police are worn out by the extra duty.

Major Edwards says he knows some cattlemen have gotten the reservation in spite of the watchers, as the hoof prints and occasional stray animals show that herds have been driven across. But that all have not gotten over is indicated by the fact that five stockmen waited on the major yesterday to see if they could not gain permission to cross. This favor Major Edwards was powerless to grant because of contrary instructions from the department.

Although Major Edwards has been strenuously enforcing his orders to prohibit stock from crossing the reservation, he is personally much in favor of an open road. While in the city today he expressed himself strongly in favor of the county roads that have been petitioned for by the stockmen.—Pendleton E. O.
