OPPOSITION TO LABOR TRUST

The proposed activity of organized labor in American politics has stirred up another organization, the citizens' industrial association, which claims a membership of approximately 3,600,000 workers, which is going into politics too, according to C. W. Post, its president. Mr. Post says that the citizens of this country will just as surely put a labor trust candidate into oblivion as the avowed representative of that trust and not of the people as they would, or at least should, defeat representatives of express, railroad, or oil trust interests. Anyone who is a good citizen has no prejudice against organized labor. There are but few of the citizens in this country who are not workers. The fact that workers in certain employments are organized into trade unions does not prove that they work harder or are entitled to special consideration above the rest of the people.

Broad minded men have and will insist that the high offices shall be filled by men who represent no class or trust or organization, but represent their country and all its people. It is an old fight and we shall never see the end of it, that between capital and labor. It is not surprising that it should appear in this form in politics. It will be interesting to see how it develops.

JAPAN'S NEW CHIEF COMMANDER

Field Marshal Oyama has retired from the head of the Japanese army and Gen. Kodama succeeds him. Oyama was the military genius commanding the Japanese land forces in the war against Russia and has taken rank by his achievements with the greatest commanders in history of the world. He is an old man now.

Kodama is little known in America. He was of humble birth and while he rose to a high position in the army, did not get himself talked about much by the people. When the war came on with Russia he somehow knew more about the navy and army and all the details of equipment than any other man in Japan. Now we are told, he was the power behind the throne all through the war, who told the field marshals and generals what to do.

He had the rank of lieutenant-general and was assistant-chief of the general staff while Oyama was chief and Marshal Yamagato was supposed, at least outside Japan, to be a greater military man than Kodama. Now it appears that his was the brain that really directed the war, the success of which proved his greatness.

The registration books were closed on the 10th, for the primary election. They will be opened again on the 26th and will remain open until the 15th day of May to permit those to register who have not already done so. Those who have registered for the primary are not required to do so again.

The soliciting committee are receiving a generous amount of Union county's bounteous store for the San Francisco sufferers.

The excitement of the San Francisco calamity has given right of way to election news for the time being.

Every state in the Union has or will respond, to the call for help of the California sufferers, in true American style.
