GEO. W. POWELL,

RELATED SYMPATHY

The big packers, composing what is called the beef trust, now express a lively concern for the interests of the farmers and stock raisers. They declare in moving tones that the disclosures of the Neil-Reynolds report strike a blow at every farmer or stockman who raises a hog or a sheep or a steer for the market. Thereby they hope to interest the class they buy their supplies from against the agitation for regulation of their business.

Heretofore the public has been led to suppose that farmers and stock raisers had a just and particular grievance against the packing combine. In fact they said so themselves, and there were grievous complaints of the methods of the trusts.

The grievance was that members of the combine, by an agreement among themselves in the purchase of livestock, were able practically to set their own price. They forced prices down at the purchasing end of their business, and forced them up at the selling end.

So farmers and stockman complained of the low prices paid for beef on the hoof, while consumers complained of the high prices charged for dressed meat. The trust's system was fixed, like the darkey's con trap, to "catch 'em a com-in' and goin'."
