NEED MORE SCHOOLS

To the Editor:—Those who grew up in the Willamette valley forty or more years ago, can comprehend the difference between the facilities of higher education in that part of Oregon then and at the present time. Forty years ago, Pacific University at Forest Grove, Willamette University at Salem, and the Baptist college at McMinnville offered something more than what we now mean by a high school course, and, although they had pretentious names, they were not nearly what they are now. At present, those institutions, Pacific College at Newburg, the Agricultural College at Corvallis, the State University at Eugene, Mount Angel College in Marion county, the Presbyterian College at Albany, Columbia University near Portland, nine institutions in all offer collegiate education to the young men and women of the Willamette valley, not to mention the Normal School at Monmouth, the Portland Academy, St. Helen's Hall and other secondary schools that dot that part of our state. There is now no necessity for a young man or young woman, desirous of a collegiate education, to leave the Willamette valley in quest of it. The schools are near his or her door. How is it in Eastern Oregon? We are fifty years behind the Willamette valley in this respect!

There is not in all Eastern Oregon an institution of learning capable of conferring the degree of B. A. or B. S. Eastern Oregon comprises more than two-thirds of the territorial area of the entire state, and this part of the state is rich in natural resources, and is growing in population and wealth quite as fast as any other part of Oregon, and it seems to me and to many that steps should be taken to procure for this part of the state an institution of learning of the first rank. This portion of the state has for many years done its part toward the support of the State University at Eugene, the Agricultural College, and the Normal School at Monmouth. Those institutions are in the heart of Western Oregon. But the state has done about nothing for Eastern Oregon in respect to higher education. It seems to me that the time is at hand for something to be done. In our northern sister, Washington, her State University is in the Western part of that state but an excellent State College is located at Pullman in the Eastern part of that state. This last named institution has a department of agriculture, but it is also a first class college, and it has a very large attendance. Now, Eastern Oregon is entitled to have what Eastern Washington already possesses, a first class college, with free tuition to all residents of the state. We are entitled to this. Western Oregon has three large institutions supported either wholly or principally by the state. We are entitled to one such institution at least, and now is the time to begin the contest to obtain it.

There are a few academies in this part of the state that are doing good work, but we must have something more than this. We want and must have an institution of the rank, where students can obtain degrees that mean something and they need not be ashamed of.

Eastern Oregon has an eligible site for such an institution of learning, the title to which is in the state. I refer to that excellent tract of state land, adjoining Union, which was purchased for a site for a branch asylum. The land is ample and in every way an excellent site for a state college. It is possible that the constitution may need amending, so as to allow state institutions to be located elsewhere than at Salem. However, the state university, the agricultural college and the different "normal" schools have been located far from Salem are supported either wholly or principally by the state. The people will vote to amend the constitution in this respect whenever they are permitted to. As the state owns an excellent site at Union, this is the place for the coming state college. It will be worth several county seats to that beautiful little city. If the county seat were removed from Eugene that place would scarcely feel the effect of the loss, but if the state university were taken away from it, that beautiful town, the gem of the upper Willamette, would be greatly and permanently injured.

A good State college at Union would be of great benefit to all Eastern Oregon, but it would benefit most that portion of Oregon nearest the college. New England surpasses other parts of the United States in giving her children college educations, and this is chiefly due to the fact that institutions of higher learning are near by, and it is not necessary to send their sons and daughters great distances to college. It will take some time to bring about location of a good college at Union, and hence, the agitation should be begun without delay. A good state college, with an agricultural department at Union, would be thronged with students and it would do incalculable good. There is danger that the state may sell the land at Union and, if it should do so, it would then be much more difficult than it is now to obtain justice for Eastern Oregon in this matter of higher education.
