VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS REGARDING IRRIGATION

State Engineer John H. Lewis spent Sunday in the city. Mr. Lewis is working hard to secure better and more equitable laws regarding the rights of water in Oregon and has made the question a matter of investigation for several years and is striving in every way possible to direct public attention to the crying need of a comprehensive state law controlling the use of the water of our rivers.

In the following interview it is shown just where the water user stands before the law and the remedial measures proposed by the State Engineer. He says: "The development of this State and especially this community is greatly retarded by the lack of definite water laws, and the value of present water rights are greatly lessened for lack of proper standing in law and protection by the state.

"Records of stream discharges to be of value must be kept daily and throughout several years as the water fluctuates from day to day, also with each season. A record of three to five years duration is of the greatest value in designing works for the use of water.

"It is next necessary to secure an abstract of water rights giving the amount of water which must be let run by to satisfy vested rights below the proposed diversion. This can only be determined at present by bringing suit against all parties claiming the right to the use of water from the stream and securing a decree of court, as the present water laws contain no penalty to enforce compliance. Only part of the vested rights have posted and filed the required notice, and many of the rights which are speculative in character have filed notices which will never become vested but serve to jumble the title to water and prevent its legitimate use.

"A lawsuit is expensive and involves the loss of time. As there is a definite limit to which the waters of each stream can be put to a beneficial use, investments will become more hazardous as this limit is reached. If an abstract of actual vested rights cannot be had careful measurements of stream flow will be of but little value in the protection of investments. The only way at present is to build your ditch, divert water and take chances on a court decision. If unfavorable, the money invested is lost. If favorable to the ditch owner, he has disturbed the peace of the community and called each user of water into court at considerable expense, when he should have been attending to the irrigation of his crops. This decree is binding only between the parties thereto. New ditches will be built, and the operation is repeated until the community is bankrupt.

"In Utah for example, all rights are determined once for all, beginning with the streams most used. Thereafter no rights can be acquired without authority of the state. Notice of the intended diversion is published and protest allowed where any one thinks his right will be injured. The question of supply and rights are carefully investigated and when the permit is issued by the state it has the same standing in law as a patent to lands issued by the Government. In an arid country the patent to land is of insignificant value compared to the water right which is the foundation of its value. Settlement is therefore retained by uncertain water laws as now exist in this state.

"An administrative system is necessary. A water master or policeman in each community would distribute the water in accordance with court decrees and future acquired rights. These rights would be recorded in order of priority. As streams fluctuate during the season the poorest rights would be shut off during the lowest water thus protecting the older rights without fear of annual contest in the courts. Where water is stored on a stream channel this officer measures the same and protects it to the point of diversion and use. Appeals from the decisions of the water master which costs nothing can be taken to the courts and only the person who thinks himself aggrieved is disturbed. The watermaster is subject to removal for cause.

"Considerable opposition is had to the change of present water laws principally from those holding speculative rights or franchises without use. When these franchises become of increased value they will be sold and not before. Fear is had lest a new law will create unending litigation. This has not been the experience of other states and as pointed out we are assured of unending litigation under present laws where the limit of a stream's use is reached. Irrigation in the Willamette Valley has been much agitated of late and the Portland Board of trade is taking an active interest in plans for uniting all sections of the state in preparing a bill which will meet the needs of each community and be supported by all. Careful study of the new measure and cooperation in its support is all that is necessary for the solution of this problem upon which the future Oregon depends."

OLD SORES OFTEN LEAD TO CANCER

Whenever a sore or ulcer does not heal and shows signs of becoming chronic, it should arouse suspicion, because many of these places lead to cancer. It may appear as an ordinary sore at first and is given treatment as such, with some simple salve, wash or plaster, with the hope that the place will heal, but the real seat of the trouble is in the blood and cannot be reached by external remedies, and soon the sore will return. After awhile the deadly poison begins to eat into the surrounding flesh and the ulcer spreads rapidly, becoming more offensive and alarming until at last the sufferer finds he is afflicted with cancer. Cancerous ulcers often start from a boil, wart, mole or pimple, which has been bruised or roughly handled, showing that the taint is in the blood, perhaps inherited. Another cause for non-healing ulcers and sores is the remains of some constitutional disease or the effects of a long spell of sickness. S. S. S. goes down to the very root of the trouble and cures so thoroughly that there is never any sign of the trouble in after years. As soon as the system gets under the influence of S. S. S. the place begins to improve, the discharge gradually grows less, the inflammation leaves, the flesh resumes its healthy color, and soon the sore is well, because every vestige of the cause has been removed from the blood. I was suffering greatly from a cancerous ulcer on my left breast, which had begun to eat, and at times would discharge very offensive matter. I knew the trouble was hereditary as an only sister, my mother and two of her sisters died of cancer. I am fully satisfied I would have gone the same way but for S. S. S., which cured me.
