JOHNSON VS. HUELAT

They started out to hunt grouse. And they got seven between them. Deputy sheriff Thomas B. Johnson, known to all evil doers in the northwest as being possessed with an unerring eye and Al Huelat, dispenser of music and music instruments known for his ability to detect a flaw in a music box but not widely known as a bird artist, left last Saturday for Ladd danyon for the express purpose of shooting the bird. "Now you might as well admit before we be, in that I am the better shot," said Thomas. "That's where you lose," retorted Al. "Just to impress upon your memory what I mean, I will wager, not bet, that I can miss more birds than you can." The bet was promptly accepted and ere long the birds were teasing the hunters extremely. "Bang" went the musician's gun. But no bird. "Bang" went the deputy's gun and still no bird. The next one sighted was bagged by Al.

Now these gentlemen had ample ammunition to keep five ordinary hunters supplied but after both had lost track of how many birds they had missed, both were out of shells. The dispute was not yet settled. Thomas had a faint recollection of seeing feathers fly after emptying three successive loads at one beautiful specimen cornered in a rocky cave, while Al had really managed to bag two nice ones.

The lack of the shells had no effect on these two sportsmen? for dropping the harmless weapons they seized rocks and "went to it" right lustily. Even here Thomas was outclassed and had to take a back seat. Mr. Huelat soon took pity on the deputy and allowed him to retrieve the birds brought to earth by Al "David."

This morning both men were busy telling listeners of the fine qualities of the other in missing grouse. After carefully considering and weighing the stories of both men it was decreed that Mr. Johnson is inefficient, yet better in his class than Al, but the class is in a class by itself,—that of missing and not hitting.

FISHERMAN ATTENTION

E. W. Winans, gives this advice to unlucky fishermen who may have the misfortune to get a hook into their hand so they cannot get it out. Instead of butchering the hand up by trying to cut it out, break the shaft off or cut it in two and pull the hook on through. It will hurt far less, not make nearly so bad a wound, is easier done and will heal in less time.

EITHER REPAIR OR DESTROY

The new system of fire alarm which has so long been trying the patience of the fire department will either be perfected at once or completely wrecked and thrown in the scrap iron heap. Dr. R. L. They both feel assured that when they get through with the bell it will either be in first class working order or be fixed to such an extent that no one can repair it.
