ILLS OF WOMANKIND

The physical organization of woman, altho most delicate and complicated, is so perfect in detail that it should work with regularity and without pain. When it fails to do so, there is evidence sufficient that the wonderful structure is out of adjustment. Drugs may relieve the pain temporarily, but they cannot restore order. Surgery may accomplish something in some cases, but it necessarily endangers life and mars the body structure seriously. Osteopathy is the only system which seeks out the actual basis of the trouble and attempts corrections.

Whether the difficulty be irregular or painful menses, leucorrhoea, barrenness, ovarian troubles, or something else, its existence means simply that the parts at fault have not the vigorous health which is rightfully theirs. Such vigorous health is dependent upon natural regulation of nourishment and nerve force—so that any illness of this nature suggests at once a disturbance in the relations of the automatic parts, causing interference with blood and nerve supply to the organs which are suffering. The centers of control for blood and nerve supply to these organs are at the spine; so that most of the structural derangements found are there and it is there that most of the Osteopathic treatment is administered. Misadjustment of pelvic bones is also a frequent cause of these troubles.

As operations are rarely necessary, and the nature of the Osteopathic treatment makes it without embarrassment to any woman, it would seem obvious that Osteopathy is a boon to women.

Should any doubt this, we would ask them to note oft-quoted words of Mrs. J. B. Foraker (wife of United States Senator Foraker, of Ohio) who once said that "the founder of Osteopathy would have made himself immortal had he discovered nothing more than his system of treating women."
