AMUSEMENT

MAUD FEALEY

While reading of Shakespear's heroines of sixteen paltry years' who possessed all the fervor, and passion, and poise, and maternity of modern forty, the time and environment are taken into account, but there is of necessity much of interest in a sixteen year old girl of today who can play Juliet with success before an American audience. This is what Maud Fealey has done and altho her playing of Shakespear's heroine was presented a few years ago, she has done much of value in her work since. She has been leading woman with Irving, and is now appearing in a modern comedy and is all in all one of the most interesting young women on the stage.

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Encouraged by the cordial reception accorded Florence Roberts on her first appearance here, John Cort has engaged an actress considerably less known either in the East or West but in whose ability the Western manager has much faith. Beatrice McClure is the young woman's name and while she is said to be one of Seattle's society buds, Mr. Cort believes she will prove as interesting to theatregoers as she is attractive in appearance. Beyond the amateur performances which form an adjunct of Seattle's social entertainments, Miss McClure has had little theatrical experience. She has been entrusted with a part of considerable importance in the comedy in which Max Figman will star this season. Miss McClure is the daughter of a well known Seattle newspaper publisher and editor. Miss Roberts will be seen at Stewards opera house early in January.

RELIGIOUS DRAMA

Faith, that giant stronghold of the Christian belief, is eloquently upheld in Wilson Barrett's intensely dramatic work, "The Sign of the Cross."

The devotion and heroism of the early Christians under the wanton cruelty and persecution of the Emperor Nero in Rome is presented with such striking realism in this play, which brot it at its first production at once to the notice of clergy, church people and students of religion. It has had for the years of its enormous success the voice of the pulpit as its strongest advocate.

It has had too, and still has the universal admiration of the theater going public. There is no play in which the triumph of right over wrong is so nobly expressed.

The story plays upon all the emotions and the consequence of thrilling incidents keeps the audiences in a state of high strung attention and excitement. The scenes of the Roman court are rich and gorgeous in the extreme and all the costly scenes, costumes, armor and appointments are presented with absolute fidelity to the requirements of history.

The original London production of "The Sign of the Cross" will be seen at Steward's opera house, Tuesday, Nov. 27. The cast contains many prominent English and American players.

DARK TOBACCO CROP

(Scripps News Association)

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 25.—Owing to the wet weather early in October, followed by a severe freeze on October the 10th, a very large part of the dark tobacco crop, both in Kentucky and Tennessee, which was uncut on that date, is now reported as an almost total loss. Agricultural Commissioner Vreeland estimates the damage on burly from various causes at 24 per cent, while the yield this year only amounts to 56 per cent when compared with other years. In the dark districts reports indicate that the crop is damaged 30 per cent and the yield 78 per cent.
