COMMODIOUS QUARTERS FOR BLUE MOUNTAIN CREAMERY

The Blue Mountain Creamery Company is today doing its regular routine of business in its new and commodious quarters in the building known as the old Land Office building. The building has been renovated throughout and is now arranged to facilitate the needs of company. From the large ante-room one can step into five various departments of the plant. To the right are the office rooms. A well lighted room will be the office of W. W. Weeks, the bookkeeper, and still beyond this room is another room, equally as comfortable, where President O. E. Harper has his desk. From the office rooms the managers can step directly into the ice cream department. From this department is a stairway leading to the basement where will ultimately be installed a cold storage plant, and where is located a large furnace to supply heat and hot water. If the visitor at the plant desires to inspect the butter making department, he has but to pass out of the ante-room and the churns and vats can be seen. Passing on thru this large room, the visitor stands in the weighing room. In this room is the rear door of the building and thru this exit will be hauled the milk from farm wagons, weighed, and exchange of buttermilk made. Here, too, is where cans will be washed. To the right of the churn room is the refrigerator. A small room adjoining contains a five horse power motor, the motive power of the place. In the left side of the ante-room is a door leading to a large chamber where milk will be tested. When customers desire to get milk at the building, they have but to step to the end of the ante-room, and there thru a window, they can transact their business with the milk department within the room. Every room is well ventilated, well lighted, and has a thorough drainage system to a central sewer. A new six hundred pound churn and a vat to correspond has been installed. This means that the capacity of the company has been doubled over what it was in the old quarters.
