DESIRED LEGISLATION NOT ALLOWED TO OSTEOPATHS

Salem, Or., Feb. 19.—(Special)—Chances for the Wilson bill creating a State Board of Osteopathy are considered poor in the House. This bill was referred several days ago to the committee on medicine and pharmacy, which has decided favorably to report the Nottingham bill providing for representation of this society on the regular State Medical Board instead of by an independent board, as proposed in the Wilson bill.

MEDICAL DOGMATISM

Physicians seem to be of all persons the most jealous of their rights. This is well enough until they attempt to hedge themselves about with special privileges supposed to be conferred by diplomas given from certain schools. Now in point of fact no man knows, and no set of men know, all that there is in the wide world of science as applied to the alleviation of physical ills. Hence when a man with with rising choler and bitter denunciation seeks to prevent others who do not see things as he sees them in the realm of therapeutics, from practicing the science of healing, either by the administration of drugs, by manipulation of the patient's body, by a system of dietetics or by the process known as mental healing, he assumes an attitude of intolerance and of persecution that is wholly at variance with the enlightened spirit of the age.

Patients die under all manner of medical and so-called scientific treatment. Why concern ourselves more earnestly about the child who dies without medicine than about the child who was given bitter and nauseous potions as long as he could swallow? Or why gird at a man or woman as a quack who does not succeed in rubbing pain and disease away and laud as a skillful practitioner the man or woman who has experimented in vain in materia medica for a remedy that would restore the patient to health?

Surgery is an exact science, and the skill of the man who practices it should be judged according to the most rigid standards of surgical knowledge; medicine, on the other hand, is but a series of experiments, some of which apparently succeed, but many of which signally fail to bring relief and restore the patient to health. Of course certain facts have been established by long juggling in the realm of experiment. Cathartics and emetics and lethal drugs usually do what is expected of them. But beyond this absolute result cannot be promised.

This being true, the doctor who calls any system of treating the sick except his own "quackery," and the death of a patient who was not treated according to a certain formula "murder," is manifestly more concerned for the infallibility of his profession than for the public weal. And when he appeals with denunciatory language to the law-making body, as did a physician of Boston the other day to the Legislative committee on registration of persons practicing the healing arts, to place Christian Scientists under the ban of the law, he assumes before the world the pose of the dogmatist rather than that of the humanitarian.—Oregonian Editorial Feb. 20, '07.
