GRAPHIC PEN PICTURE OF A TOUR ABROAD

La Grande, Jan. 17, 1903.
To the Editors, La Grande Observer:
Dear Sir: According to promise I send you an outline of my trip to the Old country and my impressions of same after an absence of 26 years. In starting out on an extensive trip the first thought of the traveler is, "What shall I need in the way of baggage?" My experience in the matter is to travel as lightly as possible, for in so doing your mind is at ease and you've nothing to occupy your thoughts, but the journey, and how to make the most of it, so that a gentleman should be satisfied with a dressing case and one small grip.

In getting away there is the usual handshaking and godspeed you of friends and loved ones, and in the midst of it all, the conductor calls, "All aboard," and lo, we start on our journey—in my case between five and six thousand miles of land and sea. My first stopping place was Salt Lake City, where I was well received by some of my old New Zealand friends and was shown the various places of interest by them. I had the privilege of hearing the great Mormon Tabernacle choir sing some anthems, accompanied by the magnificent organ. Also some of Utah's star singers, and after spending a most enjoyable time, I pulled out for my trip across the continent. In riding along in our splendid Pullman palace cars, taking in the scene "en route," my mind reverted to the old pioneer days when the Oregon trail was first opened. I tried to imagine the train of ox teams wending their slow, toilsome march across the seemingly limitless desert, and at night halt, the corralled wagons, the camp fire and the sentinel posted to keep guard over the sleeping camp, for in those days the Indian was very much in evidence, always seeking opportunity for plunder and bloodshed; but all these romantic scenes are a thing of the past, and we are now in a progressive, go-ahead age, and instead of being on the road months, a few short days will take us from Pacific to Atlantic. So much for American enterprise. Time and space will not allow me to more than glance at the various stopping places, such as Denver, city of plains—a beautiful city with many fine buildings. We took a 50-mile automobile ride through the city and suburbs and on the return the man at the helm stopped in front of the lions' den and then demanded our money. Now, whether he thought we were of the species "Hobo," I can't say; all I know is that with the furious wild animals staring us in the face we "dug up," or in other words, gracefully acceded to his demand and tendered him the sum of six bits—or 75 cents each.

Our next stopping place was St. Louis. Seen a little of the big fair; then on to Chicago, and thence to Boston via the "Nickle Plate" line, and found the accommodations inferior to the U. P.
On arrival at Boston I embarked on the S. S. "Winifredean," of the Leyland line. She had been chartered by the White Star line for the trip, and although slow, we found her a very comfortable sea boat and after the usual time seen land, which proved to be the southern extremity of Ireland. One of the passengers called my attention to the green hills, and then I realized I looked upon my native land once more, and the words of Sir Walter Scott came to me vividly:
"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said:
This is my own my native land!
Whose heart has ne'er within him burned
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering on a foreign strand."
Etc., etc., etc.

What memories that sight brought to my mind, my childhood days, the old homestead, father, mother, sisters, brothers, and those home scenes. That is indelibly impressed upon one's memory.

The following day found us in the great maritime city of Liverpool—November 5th, of Guy Hawkes memory, and after being assigned to labor in the Irish continent, started the same night for the city of Belfast, the commercial city of Ireland, with its 375,000 inhabitants. I was accompanied by my young friend, Roy Paisley of Provo City, Utah, who seemed rather dubious of his greeting by the wild Irish, and he inquired of me if the Irish were as wild as was commonly reported. I told him I'd heard that the "wild Irish" were caught in the Wicklo mountains and after they had been partially broken, they were turned adrift amongst the tame ones and in time became civilized. When we landed in Belfast my companion remarked to me: "Why, Mr. Lindsay, these people seem much like other people." I laughed and told him to wait till he had seen the home of the real Irish.

The two greatest industries here are the linen weaving and shipbuilding. From here you get your Irish linen and cambric and they also build the ships to carry it across the Atlantic. I saw one of the largest freight and passenger steamers in the world being fitted up for the Hamburg-American line. She was called the Amerika.

In regard to climatic conditions, they are as I remember them. My second day in Ireland it rained continuously and then I was confirmed in my mind that I was in Ireland sure.
