Oregon City, Ore., Feb. 28, 1908. Editor La Grande Evening Observer, La Grande, Oregon, edge that the desire exists and effort session is being made to establish a Chautauand a brief statement in detail setting of the classes:

Chautauqua is an Institution. The It should be inter-denominational in character. Its platform should be broad enough to give a hearing to the foremost and best thought of the country, but all else tends to narrow and lower the tone of American citibenship and should be sedulously excluded.

If there is any desire to establish a Chautauqua in the vicinity of La Grande, let it be understood as a first prinicpal, that the basis of thought of a Chautauqua is Christian. Not that it should be upon all occasions unduly thrust to the front, or that it savor of the nature of a campmeeting. But its aim, purposes, ambition and aspirations are along the lines of Christian culture and thought. And it is only when along these lines that any community can enlist the best endeavor of its best citizens.

No man or woman with a message calculated to benefit mankind, is excluded from its platform. If I give your readers an insight into the program of the Willamette Valley Chautauqua assembly, which meets at Gladstone park July 7, 1908, it will answer many questions and at the same time give a better idea of the scope of the work of Chautauqua, than I could hope to give by the use of mere words.

This letter is too long already. I am asked if Chautauqua is a financial benefit to a community, I answer it is difficult to measure the benefits of Chautaqua by dollars and cents. A popular assembly, well conducted and well sustained, ought to bring thousands of visitors to its annual assem biles. It necessarily follows that these people must be fed and taken care of, and all of them will spend more o
