DAMAGE BY SLIDES.

Slides at Shale Mountain Near Wyeth Cost Company Dear.

General Manager J. P. O'Brien and Chief Engineer Boschke, of the Harriman lines in this territory, will attempt to solve the problem of the Shale mountain landslides, which each year costs the O. R. & N. hundreds of thousands of dollars, and frequently paralyzes both passenger and freight traffic, says the Telegram. The matter will be taken up as soon as Mr. O'Brien joins Chief Engineer Boschke, Division Superintendent Campbell and Division Engineer Bollons, up the line. Mr. O'Brien left here this morning, and will make a thorough inspection of the whole line, together with the branches and new extension work, before he returns next week.

The "trouble mountain" near Wyeth will come in for most serious attention on his present trip, and it is understood that the company has reached the conclusion that nothing but the expenditure of enormous sums of money will ever dispose of the frequent blocking of the line by mud slides similar to those which have laid out the line during the past five days.

It is conceded that if these slides continue with the frequency that have been recurring of late, the whole O. R. & N. track at that point will be pushed out into the Columbia river.

The present trip of Mr. O'Brien is likely to result in greatly renewed activity in construction work, both in improvement of roadbed and track, and the rebuilding of the line in places, in order to put the road in shape to compete more effectively with the North Bank road on the other side of the river, the Hill line being in a position to wrest the greatest bulk of business from the Harriman road in the rich competitive territory.
