LOW WAGES IN JAPAN.

In his interesting and informative articles in Japan, Frederic J. Haskin lays bare industrial conditions which will be appalling to the well-paid wage-earners of the United States, as well as to all persons who want to see a continuance of the conditions under which American workmen receive the best wages paid anywhere upon the globe.

Mr. Haskin found that thousands of women were working for seven, six, five, four and even three cents a day. Out of a list of 50 different occupations, the Japanese bricklayer leads with a wage of 50 cents a day; shoemakers and blacksmiths get 40 cents, while leather workers and painters average only 35 cents a day. Common laborers receive only 15 cents for 10 hours' work and carpenters' wages average only 40 cents a day.

Mr. Haskin finds that "one of the reasons that this labor is cheap is because its productive power is so small." Conversely, the chief reason why American labor is so well paid is because its productive power has been so great.

It would be folly for the intelligent American wage-earner to disregard the economic truth here stated. Up to recent times organized labor in the United States had the sagacity to see that attempts to increase wages and reduce the hours of labor, if they are to be enduringly successful, must be accompanied by a willingness to maintain the high productive character of American brain and muscle, but in more recent years a tendency has been discernible in some quarters to accompany demands for higher wages with a policy of restricting the output of labor.

If that policy of diminishing the productive power of the American wage-earner should become extensive or general the consequences would be deplorable. There could be no other ending than a ruinous readjustment of wage scales. If American labor were no more productive than labor in Japan, the nation would be brought to the calamity of wage conditions substantially the same as in Japan.

The labor agitator who urges well-paid American wage earners to "soldier" at their work under the dangerous fallacy that thereby additional jobs will be created is even a greater enemy of American labor than the sweat-shop contractor of big cities who grinds down his employees to starvation pay.—Spokesman-Review.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

Remember, Every Business Man and Property Owner Should Be Present.

Wednesday night a new commercial organization is to be organized for commercial purposes only. Every business man and property owner who has the best interest of the city, at heart should see to it that he is present. We need more payrolls and this is the kind of organizations that secure them. That prince of boosters, with a record of success marked all over him, Tom Richardson of Portland, will be present to add enthusiasm to the occasion. There is nothing like successful co-operation and Tom Richardson can tell you all about it from personal experience. But then we do not have to go to Portland for this kind of information. We have plenty of experience right here at home. The business men are enthusiastic, the time is ripe for concerted action. Come out Wednesday night and help.

STOCK AND OTHER NOTES.

Trade continues active in horses and buyers continue to pick up a few good ones here and there over the country, where it was thought they were all bought up some time ago.

Dr. S. E. Nelson, of the Washington State college faculty, has been designated as a representative to the international congress on tuberculosis, to be held in Washington, D. C., next September.

The Baker City horse show and sale day was a grand success. The weather was ideal, the attendance large and the interest taken keen. The merchants report an unprecedented volume of business and stand ready to give this enterprise their loyal support in the future.—Rural Spirit.

It is estimated that about 25,000 head of cattle wintered on the Salmon River range in northern Idaho and came through the winter in fine shape. Early grass is reported unusually good and grass-fattened steers will be ready for market early in July.

FOR SALE—200 ricks 16-in. fir and pine wood; also 1200 tamarack and red fir posts. Inquire of T. R. Monk, Summerville, Ore., dA20-26
