As an evidence of what a live correspondent, backed by a wide-awake and liberal paper can do for a town we cite our readers to Saturday's Telegram. On page four appears a three-column half-tone of the Market day parade, and a 300-word write-up of the event. The value of this sort of publicity cannot be expressed in figures, but it is safe to say that La Grande will reap direct benefits from this one mention in Portland's great afternoon daily. La Grande is making a noise which will cause entire Union county to be heard of more often in the future than in the past. La Grande certainly appreciates any publicity which the press of the state may accord it or any section of the county.

If it requires the whole of the $6,000 subscribed for the Commercial club to secure one enterprise creating an additional payroll for La Grande, the investment will be a good one. La Grande needs payrolls more than it does anything else. The dinner bucket brigade makes the town. No town can ever hope to become a city without payrolls.

La Grande wants every man, woman and child in Union county to realize that the big Fourth of July celebration in eastern Oregon is going to be held in La Grande this year. We want you to make no mistake in regard to the place. In due course of time the "large bills" will be out announcing the program.

The combination of the resurrected Commercial club and the Market Day association, is going to make La Grande noticed during the year 1908.

JONES TAKES NOMINATION

Fire Chief Joe Jones has accepted the nomination for fire chief to succeed himself, which was tendered to him last Friday evening and which he refused to accept at that time. The other candidate was W. M. Monroe, but he, too, has refused to run for election. Business men, members of the city council and committees from other bodies have waited on the present chief since Friday night, and the result is that Mr. Jones will be a candidate for election at the meeting early this week. Mr. Jones has the honor of being the oldest members of the department from a standpoint of service, and has had years of experience.

Mr. Jones has held the office for three successive years, and before that held responsible positions in the department varying between chief and foreman ever since the company was organized. Hence, it is only reasonable that he should be waited upon to take the nomination. His election is assured, as the department realizes his fitness for the office.
