O. R. & N. CASE IN COURT

Two cases of unusual importance were up for consideration in the circuit court yesterday afternoon and almost the entire afternoon was taken up with arguments upon demurrers, says the Pendleton East Oregonian of Friday.

One of the cases is the criminal action brought against M. J. Buckley and other officials of the O. R. & N. company for alleged violation of the 14-hour law while the other case was that of Martin, et al., vs. the O. R. & N. company, an action which involves the reciprocal demurrage provision of the present Oregon railroad law.

At the conclusion of the arguments Judge Bean took the cases under advisement and he will not likely pass upon either one until fall.

Say State Law Was Void.

In the case against the railroad officials the contention of the defense was that Oregon's 14-hour law was void at the time the violation occurred because congress had already passed a law upon the subject.

The state law was passed in February, 1907, and in March of that year the national law was passed. However, the federal law did not go into effect for a year and during that time the alleged offense occurred.

In arguing the case yesterday, Attorney Spencer, for the railroad company, held that even if the federal law had not yet come into force the state law was void anyway, because the national congress had passed legislation on the subject.

In reply District Attorney Phelps contended that the state law was effective until the federal law went into force. In support of this stand he urged that if such were not the case congress could nullify state legislation at any time by passing laws upon the same subject, with provisions that the national laws would not go into effect for one, five or more years.

The Demurrage Case.

The Martin demurrage case was brought by Freewater-Milton people to collect $6316.50 damages because the railroad company failed to provide refrigerator cars for fruit shipments at the time wanted. Under the provisions of the present Oregon railroad law shippers are given the right to collect demurrage from common carriers.

The demurrage case was also argued by Attorney Spencer and he held, in support of his demurrer, that the demurrage feature of the Oregon law conflicts with the Hepburn law, passed by congress in June, 1906.

The defendants in the case were represented by Attorney Charles M. Kahn of Boise.

100 Degrees Friday.

At 3 o'clock Friday afternoon the thermometer at the residence of H. F. Johnson, the official weather man, registered 100 degrees. This is four degrees below the hottest temperature so far registered this summer.—Pendleton East Oregonian.
