SOMEONE OBNOXIUS

The local postoffice officials are having a strenuous time in replacing the pasteboard cards in the mail boxes which are being torn off as rapidly as they are replaced. On the face of each box is a time card, and the department insists on maintaining them in their proper place. There appears to be some one, or a series of them, who take delight in mutilating these time cards. For the benefit of those who do this, it might be said that there are few offenses that are more vigorously punished than mutilation of government property. Offenses of this nature committed in the United States court, and invariably the government exerts every effort to find and punish the wrongdoers. While it is undoubtedly the work of children, parents should notify and impress upon their children the danger of doing this. Once caught in the act, the offender, be he little or big, will fare ill before the government is through with him.

PORCUPINE ON STREET

If The Observer had all its prodigy cats and dogs in one place it would have a miniature menagerie. The latest addition to the zoo is a fine specimen of the animal called porcupine. The first arrivals at The Observer office this morning found a monster porcupine calmly wandering about the street searching for trouble. Ingenuity is always a splendid virtue and this time it proved itself so again. The mechanical force soon had Mr. Pork U. Pine corralled, and safely landed in a wooden box. Not being well versed in porcupinism, some trouble has been experienced in knowing what to feed the animal. A daring bystander, wishing to see the animal from different points of view, attempted to prod the animal with his foot, and was immediately presented with a beautiful collection of tines, his shoe representing a well-filled pin cushion.

The animal is very active and resents the frequent peeps into the box in which he is held prisoner. The side of the box bristles with the needles he has jabbed into the board in hopes of punishing those who dare look at them. He is now at the F. B. Currey home on Pennsylvania avenue, where a crowd of small folks are anxiously learning things about porcupines,—principally to keep away from them.

Electric Smelter Likely.
We have it on good authority that upon the completion of the railroad to Joseph an electric smelter will be installed in sight of the city. While the names of the parties who are financing this project are not made public, it is understood that they have unlimited capital.

We have all the natural resources, both to operate and make the smelter a paying proposition. Enough electricity can be generated from the falls to run the smelter besides furnishing electricity to all the towns in the valley, and then some. As for the ore, enough paying ore is in sight on the different prospects in the Joseph mountains to run the smelter night and day for one year. This electric power has been laying idle here long before Chief Joseph made this chosen spot his camping, fishing and hunting grounds, and after all these years it is going to be harnessed and converted to the use of man. The railroad is a great civilizer.—Joseph Herald.

Admirers of the great Commoner, William Jennings Bryan, can hear the distinguished gentleman's voice in 19 short, pithy speeches, at Davis' Music Store.
