"GOIN' A-FISHIN'." Boyhood Reminiscences From the State of Illinois.

After a long, hot week of corn-plopping, comes Saturday morning bright and fair; a few tall weeds are left along the rail fence, just enough to keep us all hustlin' until noon.

Down the lane one-half mile and here we are. Just a little breeze moves the tops of the tall straight pin-oaks, and the ghostly sycamore with its fan-like leaves quivering just enough to let down long streams of sunlight that shimmer on the deep black water like burnished silver.

50 yards away as silently as he left, and just as curious. The beautiful blue-coated kingfisher greets us with a raucous yell and pounces upon an unsuspecting minnow that floated in range of his unerring marksmanship.

One minute, two minutes, three minutes! How still, save the droning of thousands of bees high up in silvery-leaved maples; the woods seems to sleep.

Hey, there, you're getting a bite! Three or four gentle little pulls, a sharp tug, and down and away goes your bob.

Aln't it a beauty? Blue and gold back and side, with peacock eye on tail of gill; god, big one, almost a pound. Run a string through its mouth, hang it in the water, and wait; not long, they are all around, and hungry, too, and an hour's sport gives you a fine string.

Long shadows and pestiferous swarms of hungry mosquitoes warn you that the day is almost done. Stiff and sore from long sitting, you wind up your line for home, well pleased with your afternoon's sport, and—mess of fish.
