EVIDENCE OF DRUG WORK.

Murder Case in Baker City Brings Out a New Sensation.

Tuesday forenoon was the time of intense interest in the Trapp murder trial, which is now in progress in the circuit court. Throughout the entire affair there has been more or less mystery about the matter and this in a measure was lifted this morning when D. R. Trapp, the accused man, took the stand to testify for himself, says the Herald.

The main point Trapp endeavored to make was that he was drugged before he did the shooting and did not know what he was doing. He said his wife had gone to Ontario a short time before for a visit and the night preceding the shooting he began drinking freely. According to his statement he drank whisky with beer chasers, and a good many of them, and finally landed at the "Honkinton," an out-lawry resort just outside of Huntington's city limits. There Trapp says he drank a cocktail, after which he knew nothing. He remembers of going to a table or couch where he laid down, but aside from that his recollection is blank until officers had him on the way from Huntington to Baker City. Then his memory returned only for a moment, long enough for him to recognize Officer Hannon who had him in charge. And he did not brighten after reaching the county jail, according to his tale, for several days. In fact, it was when Attorney Hyde explained to him what he had done that Trapp first knew things well.

All the time Trapp was giving that part of his testimony each juror sat with his head forward, grasping every word and apparently weighing it carefully in his mind.

Trapp said he was no habitual drunkard, and that he frequently went six months without taking a drink, although he admitted that the custom among bartenders was to treat each other whenever they were off duty. He said he had no ill feeling toward Jaspersen, the man whom he killed, and that he remembered nothing of getting the gun. Also that he had never owned a gun and never had shot a revolver in his life before.

The prisoner's evidence, while interesting, crossed itself in a few places. What weight it will have with the jury remains to be seen.

CONCERT EXCELLENT.

Courted Stars Render Music Such as Was Never Heard Here Before.

A small but appreciative audience heard the Courted Metropolitan Opera quartet last evening in the tabernacle, and were the four to appear here tonight, the auditorium would be filled without a doubt. It is no idle boast to say that nothing equal to it has ever been heard here before, and those who overlooked the chance to hear grand opera music have something to be sorry for. Each member of the quartet is an exceptional artist, and before the concert was ended, those who heard it were unanimous in their praise. The "Soldiers' Chorus," rendered by the visiting musicians and assisted by the tabernacle choir was a masterly rendered number.
