PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

SARAH A. EVANS' ADDRESS READ YESTERDAY.

Annual Address to Federation Deals With Library, Civics, Pure Food, Irrigation, Art and a Long List of Other Important Subjects of the Age.

Club women and guests at the convention in the Masonic Temple yesterday, heard President Sarah A. Evans of Portland, deliver her annual address, which gave a general outline of what the Oregon Federation of Women's clubs is doing for itself and for fellow beings. The report covers a large field and Observer readers cannot afford to let the opportunity slip and not learn of the scope and the effective means of reaching the goal, which the federation has. Following her introductory clause, Mrs. Evans said in part:

The Working Medium.

"Our working medium is, of course, our committees, and they should be in closest touch with the clubs of the state. The work of every committee does not appeal to every club, but no committee can successfully do its work without an interest being shown by the clubs, even to the extent of declining to assist. At the suggestion of the national organization, three years ago our state reorganized its committees to correspond with the committees of the General Federation, adding some that local conditions seemed to demand. Every one of them is vital to carry on the work that will make Oregon keep step with the march of progress.

Library Work.

"Our library work is another place where we can all work in unison. With our excellent state library commission there seems little active work for this committee to do, and I would recommend that this committee be combined with the committee on literature, whose duty it would be to assist clubs in outlining study courses, compiling bibliographies, and service of that nature.

"A suggestion was recently made that the club women of Oregon collect and publish the poems of Sam Simpson. I heartily endorse the suggestion and recommend that a special committee be appointed for the purpose of consulting with the relatives of Mr. Simpson, with this in view, and that the committee be given power to act with the consent of the board.

Along Civic Lines.

"Again we meet on common ground with our committee on Civics, for who does not love the City Beautiful, or who does not wish to assist in the eradication of disease, through a campaign of education? I would, therefore, suggest that every club procure literature on the subject of social hygiene and tuberculosis, and after studying it yourselves, distribute it for the enlightenment of others. At the last biennial a health section of the Civic committee was created, which will furnish you all the literature on these subjects you may desire.

Bureau of Information.

"Reciprocity is but another word for federation; it is the mutual exchange—the giving and taking—and to broaden its scope, at our last meeting we exchanged the word reciprocity for bureau of information. It can not, however, fulfill its mission without the most hearty co-operation of the clubs from the very nature of it. It must have your year-books; it must have every one of those excellent papers you spent so much time on; the most significant will probably be the very subject someone else will want and need, because she cannot get the reference book to get the material from. Then you have the privilege of calling upon the bureau when your hour of need comes. It stands ready to serve you without cost whenever you call upon it.

Pure Food.

"When a certain city council recently, after making extravagant appropriations for city improvements, refused to appropriate money for a much-needed laboratory and chemist to examine the poisonous foods that were on the market in great quantities, someone asked, 'What difference it made whether we had handsome parks and good pavements if we were all dead?' While this was rather a startling way to put the matter, we all know that after everything is paid and done, our greatest asset is good health; and as the body is sustained by food, the kind of food we take into it is of paramount importance. Oregon needs an awakening, and unless the home-keepers take some of our conditions in hand, it will be an awakening that will bring sorrow and lamentation into the homes of many. I refer to our dairy conditions.

Forestry.

On the subject of forestry the club women have shown themselves alert and intelligent. In this branch of our work the government has again recognized the efficiency of their work by paying of their services. The forester, Enos Mills. It will be gratifying to those who heard Mr. Mills at Salem last year to know he has been promised to Oregon again this winter. His services are given free of cost to the clubs, and applications for his services by clubs that are interested in forestry can be made to the chairman of the forestry committee.

Irrigation.

"With the subject of forestry goes irrigation. It is a subject of national importance; but why, you ask, should it come into club work? Our committee would answer, for the life and beauty and joy it brings into the homes of the women of the desert places, and we cannot turn a deaf ear to any call that will lighten the burdens of the mothers of men.

Civil Service Reform.

"Civil service reform sounds so ominously political that most of us shy off from it, lest we become contaminated. Let us call it good citizenship and see how differently we look at it. It means, simply, putting all public service into the merit system, and training children to look upon public service as an honorable occupation, rather than an opportunity to graft, or as a plum for political distribution. I am authorized by the board to place in the hands of our committee $5 to be offered as a prize for the best high school essay on "Good Citizenship." This is done, hoping it will induce some of the clubs to do something locally.

Chautauquas.

"Our Chautauqua work is a joy and a pleasure, and one of our most efficient sources for the promulgation of club work, and I strongly recommend its continuance.

Art.

"Mrs. Sherwood said at Boston: 'You believe in the beautiful; that is the heart of God. You know that is one way to find Him, through the good and the beautiful. In the school, in the civic beauty of the town, in our own lives, it is impossible to estimate the change there would be in our beloved country if the ugly and the evil could be crowded out by beauty.' Surely we should assist our committee in this endeavor."

In conclusion, Mrs. Evans said: "To our faithful officers I extend my warmest thanks, making special mention of our capable and never-tiring corresponding secretary, who has carried her own and a great part of my burden.

"Let me admonish you; as a parting word, that in all our deliberations we keep in mind the old Saxon motto: 'Each for all, all for each.'"
