At the request of the commercial men of this state hotel keepers in the future will provide nine-foot sheets, according to a new law just passed by the legislature. During the same week the length of hatpins was also limited to 10 inches. Whether the commercial men were interested in this bit of reports from the capital do not state.

This has been an exceedingly busy week in social and educational circles. Several events had to be postponed, there were not sufficient nights in the week to go around.

It does not take long to jump out of good old summer time weather in winter. We must not get too impatient—spring is not here yet.

Circuit court next week. Possibly the grand jury may dig up a little excitement. If things are a little dull today we live in hopes.

SENTENCE ON FRIDAY

Judge Knowles has set Friday as the date for the hearing and passing sentence on Charles Anderson for contempt of court for giving the jury men a box of cigars while deliberating upon the case wherein Anderson was defendant, charged with violating the local option law. Earl Jones, who is a witness in the case, is at present in the hospital, but it is expected that he will be able to be out by that time.

DISPUTE ENDS

The case of J. D. Casey vs. the O. R. & N. company, which has been on the court docket for the past three years, which involved damages for building set fire by engines, has been settled, the railroad company paying $250. While Mr. Casey is nominally the prosecutor, the insurance company is the real prosecutor.

FRUIT IS HURT

Walla Walla, Jan. 26.—Although the opinions of experienced fruit men seem to differ in regard to the amount of damage wrought upon the crop for the coming season, there is still every reason to believe that the Walla Walla valley output of fruit will be larger than before. R. E. Trumbull, former assistant experimental entomologist of the Washington State college, has made a study of the trees and reports that the crop has suffered but very little. Mr. Trumbull has just returned from the Klickitat and White Salmon country, and examined the trees in that section of the country also. In regard to this matter, he said: "I do not think any of the fruit is damaged to any perceptible degree in this valley or in the country I have just been visiting. If hurt at all, the crops will be affected but slightly and I think the crop for the coming year shows every prospect of being a record-breaker."

This seems to be the opinion of several local fruit men, but the "doubting Thomases" also exist. Some of these declare that peaches can not live after the weather gets five below zero and that the limit for cherries is about 13 below.

Their opinion is that the peach crop is totally destroyed—except for a few dormant buds—and the Bing cherries are also frozen out. While this may be so, the majority of people favor the "bumper crop" idea, exclusively and state that if anything, the output will be benefited rather than damaged by the cold snap.

The consensus of opinion among the managers of the packing houses and produce dealers, however, is that, notwithstanding the annual crop failure report, the Walla Walla valley orchards will yield their usual heavy returns this fall when the fruit is gathered.
